it instead of raising it. Put tax on other things. Tax whisky and champagne wines and tax incomes to raise a part of the revenue needed. This will relieve the poor of a part of their taxation, and will put some of the burdens of the Government upon the rich manufacturers and bondholders, and will compel these merchant princes, such as my friend here, and the Stewarts, Dodges, &c., to contribute a portion of their enormous profits to the support of the Government. Yes, Mr. Chairman, by an income tax we could compel some of the monster corporations to contribute a part of their immense profits for the support of that Government that gives them protection.

My friend from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] informs me that he is not engaged in importing. He does not own a dollar's worth of merchandise here or abroad; and I cheerfully withdraw my reference to him.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I think the truth of the matter is that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] divides it up in this way: He leaves his business with his boys, and comes here to run the politics of the country.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I protest that that is not the case.

Mr. FORT. Instead of levying additional import duties, I am in favor of internal taxation—taxing the intoxicating whisky and wine; taxing whisky on hand as well as that which is to be made hereafter. Tax it a dollar a gallon if you please. Tax high salaries. Tax our salaries. Tax large incomes, and put no more burden upon articles used by those who are unable to pay any more than they now do.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPEER obtained the floor.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to have some time indicated when debate on this section may close.

Mr. KELLOGG. We have had very little debate on this section.

Mr. DAWES. If it can be generally understood that in twenty minutes' time all debate on this section will close, I will not move that the committee rise to obtain an order from the House to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. LOUGHBRIDGE and many others objected.

Mr. DAWES. I will ask the majority of the House to determine that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPEER. The democratic convention which met in Baltimore in 1872 declared what I believe to be the true doctrine upon the question of tariff, in these words:

We demand a system of Federal taxation which shall not unnecessarily interfere with the industry of the people, and which shall provide the means necessary to pay the expenses of the Government, economically administered, the pensions, the interest on the public debt, and a moderate reduction annually of the principal thereof; and recognizing that there are in our midst honest but irreconcilable differences of opinion with regard to the respective systems of protection and free trade, we remit the discussion of the subject to the people in their congressional districts, and to the decision of the Congress thereon, wholly free from executive interference or dictation.

Whether this bill be called a revenue bill or a tariff bill, it is wrong upon our part to attempt to make it a political measure. The question is, is the passage of this bill in this form, or in any other in which it may be put, essential to carry on the Government? If it is, we all should support it; if it is not, we should not support it.

I am not satisfied that under existing duties we will not have enough revenue. What we need most is not additional taxation but an honest and economical administration of the Government. The general paralysis of business for the last eighteen months has caused a reduction in the national revenue; but the bill now pending, if passed, cannot produce immediate results. I believe with honesty and economy we need no additional taxation; yet if I be in error in this, I feel sure that with the revival of business the coming summer our receipts will be ample to meet our necessary expenses.

This bill increases the tax on tobacco, whisky, sugar, and molasses, and proposes to repeal the act of 1872, which reduced the duty on iron and other articles 10 per cent. The section of the bill repealing the tax on matches, which I heartily approved, has been struck out; and the motion now is to strike out the fifth section, increasing the duty on iron and other articles 10 per cent. To this I am opposed; for if we need additional revenue at all it should be raised by levying duties on those productions and manufactures which give employment and reward to labor.

I am inclined to vote against the bill as a whole in its present form, because I do not believe its passage is demanded by the necessities of the Government; but if it is to pass, I hope the fifth section will not be struck out. In my judgment the fourth section, increasing the duties on molasses and sugar, should be defeated, as it is unnecessary in any just view that can be taken of the public needs.

We require from two hundred and fifty to three hundred million dollars annually to carry on the Government and pay the interest on our debt. How shall it be raised? By direct levies upon the States or by impost duties? It has been the practice of this Government from its foundation to raise its revenues mainly by imposts. When we admit the correctness of this policy, then the only remaining question is upon what articles shall this duty be laid and at what rates?

When we come to that, we strike local interests and sections. New England wants this article protected; Pennsylvania wants that article protected, Michigan another, and Kentucky another. So it becomes a grab game, every State and every section for itself, and the result is a compromise bill, protecting to some extent at least the interests of the whole country. When I hear gentlemen from New York and other places sneeringly say of Pennsylvania that her Representatives are faithful to her interests, I cannot but reply that if they were faithful to the interests of their people instead of the interests of British importers, it would be better for our State and national prosperity.

Take my district, for instance, rich in mineral wealth. Its fields are gardens; its hills mines of wealth. It is not a pauper on the Government. From year to year it gets no appropriations for local improvements. In peace and war, in sunshine and storm, it stands faithful to the Government, and takes not a dollar by direct appropriation out of the Treasury. Yet we make appropriations here for Hell Gate, New York; for the rivers and harbors of Michigan, Wisconsin, and for the mouth of the Mississippi River to the extent of millions and millions of dollars that are silently paid into the Treasury, their respective shares being paid by my constituents and not a word said by them, without turning to the Representatives of those districts and saying you are paupers on Pennsylvania. But when the toiling millions of my own State who live by the labor of their hands ask that our factories, iron mills, and furnaces may be started that they may earn the bread to feed their families, we hear the cry of "pig-iron," "protection." Is not Pennsylvania a part of the country, and should not every Representative here take a just pride in her greatness and prosperity? Born upon her soil, I trust the day shall never come when I shall be found recreant to her interests; but while a Pennsylvanian, proud of the history and position of my State, I am an American, prouder still of the history of my country, her matchless march to power, and her manifest destiny.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted. The question is upon the motion to strike out the last three words of this section.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FIELD. I renew the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Move to strike out the last four words; the committee has just decided not to strike out the last three words.

Mr. FIELD. I move to strike out the last four words. My chief objection to this section is that it does not raise the duties high enough. I am opposed to the policy of taxing domestic productions, because such taxation oppresses the people; but, Mr. Chairman, I favor the policy of taxing foreign productions, and taking the revenue which our Government requires out of the pockets of foreign manufacturers and foreign monopolists. Let us provide the required revenue by imposing the increase of taxation on foreign productions as proposed in the pending section, and in this way we shall take more money out of the pockets of foreign producers, and at the same time secure for our countrymen at home a larger amount of labor.

Mr. Chairman, this is a laboring-man's country. More than nineteen-twentieths of our population are laboring people; and it is patent to the understanding of every man that the more labor and employment we reserve for the country the more our laboring population will prosper and become independent. Therefore I favor this policy of taxing foreign producers when they wish to come into our markets to sell their productions.

If we adopt the section now under consideration, it will yield to the Treasury at least $10,000,000 of revenue per annum. The section of the act of June 6, 1872, which made a 10 per cent. reduction of duties, caused a heavy reduction in revenue, as shown by the report from the Bureau of Statistics.

The varied productions necessary to supply the demands of civilized life are the results of labor; and if we allow the people of other countries to do one-half of the work required in furnishing these productions, then our own people can do only the other half. That is a plain proposition and can be understood by all. Our working people all over the country are beginning to see that when our home markets are supplied by foreign producers they are robbed of their own labor, are denied the occupations to which they are accustomed.

European labor has been supplying our market altogether too much with those manufactures and commodities which our people would be glad to produce and thus enlarge and diversify domestic employments. We have the raw material here; we have the artisans and the workmen who can do all the labor required in the country, and if foreigners wish to work for our markets let us require them to "step up to the captain's office," that is the custom-house, and pay the tolls which a protective tariff requires. I favor this policy; it is the policy of the West; it is the policy that our farmers indorse, and not the policy which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] advocated the other day. He said he wanted wool to come in free. Sir, our farmers ask the adoption of this section because they want a tariff upon wool which will help our wool-growers and make the country more prosperous. Our western farmers can supply the manufacturers of the East with all the wool they require.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. FIELD. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] yields to me for three minutes.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. No, I believe not. I will yield one minute to the gentleman.

Mr. FIELD. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand that some gentlemen on this floor from New England are not very favorable to this section of the bill. The manufacturers of New England have been prosperous; they have been doing very well under those laws which have given to them the markets of our country; and they are more willing today to compete with foreign monopolists and foreign manufacturers than to compete with the rising manufacturers in the West. They know that very soon the Western States will do their own manufacturing; and then they will not have those markets to enjoy as they have had in the past. Now, Mr. Chairman, in my judgment we ought to increase the tariff on all foreign manufactures 10 per cent. every quarter until the price of gold falls to the par of greenbacks; and then instead of draining the country of our gold every year, instead of shipping $100,000,000 in gold every year as we have been doing for the past fifteen years to pay for the productions of foreign labor imported, we should do our manufacturing at home and thus keep our laborers employed and keep the gold produced from our rich mines.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I have taken no part in this discussion thus far, and I rise now simply to state in a very few words the reasons why I shall vote in favor of striking out this section. I do not believe that the section is in the interest of revenue. I believe that it involves nothing more nor less than a tax upon the producers, the farmers, the laboring classes of this great country, and nine-tenths of this tax will go into the pockets of the iron-masters of Pennsylvania. I do not wonder, sir, that when this section is under consideration all the Pennsylvanians on this floor (democrats and republicans alike) rise to their feet to advocate it. I see democrats on the other side of the House—standing, I suppose, within the ranks of their party upon every other question—rising here and advocating the imposition of 10 per cent. additional upon a heavily taxed people in a tariff which is now almost prohibitory in its operation, the duty being upon some articles 40 and 50 per cent.; upon different articles of iron averaging about 30 per cent. Upon the article of carpets the duty is 45 per cent., and yet gentlemen on this floor—democrats, too—rise here and demand that an additional 10 per cent. shall be taken out of the pockets of the laboring people of this country. And this is not to be added to the revenues of the Government.

I now ask the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS,] who declined to answer before, to explain if he can how this is in the interest of revenue. I understood him to say that he had recently seen acres upon acres of pig-iron awaiting a market, piled up ready for sale, and no purchasers. I would like to ask him how this additional duty will enable the owners of that iron to sell it? How will it make a market for that iron? In what way will this additional duty so operate and give relief to the owners?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. The statement I made was that the price of the manufactured article would not be increased by the additional duty, because the supply is so great.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Then how will they be able to sell that iron, and how will its owners be relieved?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I did not say that they would be able to sell it.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Then I cannot see the point of the gentleman's argument.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I say the supply is so great that the enhanced duty will not increase the price.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I tell the gentleman that they will get an additional amount for their iron equal to the increase of the duty; that much will be added to the price of the iron to be paid by the consumers; that much more will be added to the price of the iron made in this country as well as the iron imported. This must be so; otherwise the iron interests of Pennsylvania will derive no benefit from this duty, and they certainly expect some special benefit as evidenced by the zeal with which their Representatives support the section on this floor.

They believe—what is the fact—that the amount of this additional duty will be added not only to the price of the iron imported, but to the price of every pound and ounce of iron now manufactured or to be manufactured in this country, and to all ironwares and all manufactures of iron, and the people will pay $100,000 to get $8,000,000 into the Treasury.

Now, sir, I say again I oppose this imposition of 10 per cent. on an already heavily taxed people, affecting especially as it will my constituents in the West. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFFIELD] says this is a compromise and gives advantages to every interest. What interest have the farmers of the country in this tariff section, the effect of which will be simply that they will have to pay that much more out of their pockets than they otherwise would have done? And not one-tenth of the addition they pay will go into the Treasury.

Sir, I protest against this section, as an injustice and an outrage upon the masses of the people.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey. The principal objection to this bill, so far as I can discover from this debate, is that it imposes a tax on whisky and also a tax on tobacco without being attended with corresponding benefits to the parties taxed. Now, the only justification for such a tax is the necessity of the Government. If the necessity of the Government be sufficient to authorize it, then we should acquiesce; and not otherwise. The restoration of the 10 per cent. is thrown in with the view of benefiting the manufacturing interest. I take it that the sense of this House is to restore that 10 per cent. which was heretofore taken off.

Then it comes back to the proposition, shall we tax spirits and tobacco? There is only one good reason for it and that is the importance of maintaining the honor and credit of the Government, to keep up its sinking fund and to keep the Government in a proper condition in the management of its affairs. That is the only justification for this measure.

Looking at it in that light, taxation is not oppression. We draw from the people and we give back to the people. The sun which draws water up to the heavens and sheds it in copious showers upon hill and valley while it takes it restores; and in an important sense such is the operation of taxation in our own country and in every country. You must maintain the credit of your Government. No great people, no rich people, no powerful people has a poor government. A government that is poor represents a poverty-stricken people as a rule. Therefore if you pay taxes enough and keep the affairs of the Government in a sound condition, you raise the credit of the nation and you necessarily to some extent, even though you may seem for a time to oppress industry, raise and sustain industry. That is the natural and inevitable result according to all the well-established principles of political economy relating to that subject.

And, further, you will be able to fund your public debt cheaper; you will prevent bonds from being sent here from Europe to be sold; you will keep off panics, distress, and disaster. Moreover, you will nerve the arm of the soldier in his duty, and enable the sailor to bear mast-head the glorious flag of his country. You will produce confidence all over the country and raise our credit abroad, and that confidence itself is a great part of success and prosperity, without which beneficial results cannot be accomplished.

For these reasons and upon these grounds alone I am constrained to support this bill.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I desire to submit a few remarks as reasons why I propose to vote for this fifth section. It strikes me that many gentlemen in the House when discussing this question of tariff and taxation are constrained to localize their views, and if they conceive that Pennsylvania or New England is likely to derive any immediate benefits from the passage of a law of this kind they at once indulge in eloquent tirades against the passage of any such proposition.

This is not a local question. It is a question which pertains to the whole nation. I believe that the prosperity of this nation is to be restored by the development of our internal commerce rather than by dependence upon our external commerce. Therefore whatever has a tendency to develop that internal commerce meets my approval. While my friend from Iowa, [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE], situated as he is, may see proper to oppose this, I believe he is making a mistake.

I believe that the true solution of this question of getting the full value for the products of the farmer depends in the end not so much upon the capacity of Congress to fix this question of transportation, but in placing the farmer side by side with the consumer. Let me say to the gentleman from Iowa that immediately south of his State there will be found one of the States of this Union known as Missouri, that has in it iron, lead, and tin, and all of the mineral resources of which are yet to be developed, and which in the future will place thousands, yea millions of consumers of the products of his State side by side with the farmers of Iowa—the men who raise corn, wheat, and pork, to be fed to these mechanics and laborers in the mines, factories, and mills of Missouri in the future.

Now, sir, if there is ever any change in this question of the tariff that change will be this: that the States lying upon the sea-board of this Union will in the end look to foreign commerce, and the great States in the interior, like Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas, Kentucky, Texas, Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia will be the great manufacturing districts of this country.

Mr. COX. I have only five minutes to speak. In that time I propose to answer three gentlemen. That will be one minute and forty seconds to each. These gentlemen are my friend from Michigan, [Mr. FIELD,] the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SPEER,] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania who spoke the other day, [Mr. KELLEY.]

I will begin with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] for he seems to be singularly situated. He is opposed to this bill. He is a republican and opposes this administration measure, and yet we find democrats from Pennsylvania favoring its worst features. We have Pennsylvania democrats willing to vote all its worst features—the 10 per cent. raise—for local and selfish reasons, and to vote against it if these bad lineaments are not preserved. What is singular is that democratic gentlemen from Pennsylvania plead these local claims. They shriek for their districts, while the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] on the republican side votes against this bill on a higher plane, even if it be much lower than that of others of our side.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] the other day made an unfortunate reference to localities. He referred to myself in that connection. He said that the farmers of Ohio drove me out of the State and that I was now ignobly representing the "importers." He intimated that I had made the same speech here on this topic for fourteen years.

Sir, I have made speeches upon this question for fourteen years. But they are all imbued with same generous and liberal band, and have that variety in unity which springs from the various circumstances of our remarkable situations before, during, and since the war. Those relations connected with the currency, and pertinent to war tariffs, are new thoughts, though founded on immutable principles. His reproach to me for consistency does me honor. His allusions to my scholarship are hardly deserved.

But, I congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he is opposed to this bill. It indicates progress. His people will be rejoiced to learn that after many fitful fights and fevers, he denounces such measures and votes against them. In this, he is in strange contrast with his democratic colleagues. But he has said, to counteract my efforts here for the farmers, that I was driven from my home in Ohio by that class. Sir, I was gerrymandered out of my district by a republican Legislature. But there are two democratic members here representing my old district. Let them speak as to my friends there. My object in going to New York, after my service here, is no one's business; but I volunteer to say, it was not ambitious or partisan or political. I settled, without knowing it, in a republican district, from which I was twice elected. I represent another district now scarcely without competition. It is a district of workingmen. If, however, I speak for the "importers," I may say that they never asked anything in bounty from Congress.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] who sits near me, so meekly, let the cat out of the bag when he said that we of the Atlantic States and Western States get appropriations for rivers and harbors, while they who live in the Middle States get nothing, because they are in the interior. He wanted bounties inland, to make up for the taxes on the rivers and coasts. Bounties for what? For his iron and coal mines. "You thus get direct taxes from the people," he would exclaim; "and we want indirect taxes to help our interests by tariff." He thus admits the whole fallacy of protection. I say this irrespective of platforms or previous condition of parties.

Now for the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. FIELD.] I love to hear him. He reminds me of Nature: "Sweet fields arrayed in living green, and rivers of delight." He manufactures cloth; compare my clothes with his own. I bought these clothes in Canada for $21.

Mr. DAWES. And smuggled them in.

Mr. FIELD. I get an American tailor to do my work.

Mr. COX. The gentleman says he gets an American tailor to do his work.

Mr. FIELD. And a Michigan one, sir.

Mr. COX. I get my clothes to suit me, by the laws of liberty and sense. Now keep still or I will take your clothes off you.

I refer to this fact as illustrative of the tariff and its protection. While we can buy such clothes in Canada for $21, a suit of the same kind of clothes costs the people in this country $50. How much of that is revenue, how much protection? I do not care who makes the cloth. Cloth and clothes do not make patriots by the place of manufacture! Only about $10 or $20 of that amount goes into the Treasury. Where does the rest of the $50 go? It goes into the fob of manufacturers. They take the money from the needy and laborious farmers and mechanics of the country whose interests are in cheap clothes for themselves and families.

I have now answered three members in five minutes; and I am happy.

Mr. KELLOGG. The gentleman who goes to Canada and buys his clothes and smuggles them in over the lines, instead of patronizing his own constituents, has been very well answered by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. FIELD.] But I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to the speech which I have heard him make here for six years right straight along in this connection. It is this; the lower you put your duties on our manufactures the more revenue you get, because you increase the importations. Now the tables from the Treasury Department, as found in the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] who moves to strike out this section, show that the actual importations after the 10 per cent. reduction went into force was more than reduction of last Congress. You cannot lay it to the panic of 1873, for the falling off in imports of these articles commenced from the very day the 10 per cent. reduction took effect, and nine or ten months before the panic. A report to this House made last session shows this. I will give the tables as contained in the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] to sustain my position and statements:

IMPORTS.

Now, if you have a good business here, if your men get two dollars or two dollars and a half a day, their wives and daughters will buy foreign goods. I believe in paying good wages for American labor, and you can do it if business is good. But strike down your own industries, throw your men out of employment and they will not only be unable to buy foreign goods, but will find it difficult to keep the wolf from the door. Make business good, and you have more importations from abroad, and you will have an increased revenue. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] never fails to go for all the duty he can have on hemp, and yet he takes the same ground as my friend from New York [Mr. COX] when you come to New England manufactures.

I shall sustain this section, but not for the protection of any industry whatever. As I said the other day, New England is not constantly asking for us to disturb the tariff for the sake of protection. She prefers a stable, settled policy, and not these constant changes of tariff. I will not vote a dollar in the bill for the sake of protection only, but I will vote for all that may be necessary in my judgment for the revenues of the country. As I said to the gentleman from Michigan, who would like to have wool protected still more, that I was not in favor of it for the reason that it is now protected with a duty of 54 per cent., while most other articles that were embraced in the 10 per cent. reduction have a protection of but 31 or 35 per cent., I think it is better to leave it with its 54 per cent. protection as it is now, than to make any change in it; and I think our woolen manufactures would revive if they could get their foreign wools, which they are obliged to use for certain kinds of goods, at a lower rate of duty; and they would make an increased demand and a better market for your domestic wools if you would make the burdens on the raw material less, and increase and diversify our own manufactures.

The other day one gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] who seems to have his brain affected about Connecticut tobacco, and to be afraid our tobacco will get some advantage over his, said that we in Connecticut asked to have this tax on tobacco increased for our benefit. Not at all; we would be glad to be rid of all the increased tax on tobacco. And let me tell my friend from Ohio, when he talks about Connecticut, that Ohio is but one of the children of Connecticut; a splendid, great, overgrown child, it is true. We sold the better part of your great State of Ohio once for $1,200,000, and waited five years without interest before we got our first installment at that price. I will repeat one word in regard to the wool interest, that if you increase the duty it would rather be a burden than a benefit to our manufacturers and no benefit to the wool-growing interest. It has already 54 per cent. protection; about 20 per cent. higher than most other classes of articles embraced in the 10 per cent. reduction. I would like to see the section adopted with that exception; but if it cannot be done I shall vote for the section as it now stands, for the purpose of increasing the revenues of the Government.

Mr. BIERY. I want to say a few words on this section. I am against the motion to strike it out, not because I am from Pennsylvania, not because I represent a district interested in pig-iron and rolling-mills, but because of the principle which I hold, that protection to American industry is essential to our prosperity. It seems to me that the arguments which are arrayed here against this section strike not against Pennsylvania or New York, or any other manufacturing State, but against the general interests of manufacturing industry the country over.

If Illinois chooses to array itself against the development and manufacture of raw material, let it be so. If Iowa, if some parts of the South, think it is better to array themselves against those States that develop and turn into manufactures the raw material, let it be so. I will say, however, that in order to perpetuate the prosperity of the country in all its various interests we must look to the protection of American industry.

Can it be possible that one State can have an interest in this country which does not affect the interest of every other State? Can it be possible that the large manufacturing interests located in my native State can be against the interests of Iowa or Illinois? My county has as rich a soil as there is upon God's footstool; yet we do not produce grain enough to feed our operatives. Illinois feeds a great part of my people living in Lehigh County. We go to the great market of Chicago, in Illinois, and bring wheat to our doors, and grind it to feed our operatives. Iowa sends her pork there for them to eat. We get from the South her cotton and spin it into yarns and make cloth of it, and our operatives wear it. We feed our operatives with the rice that South Carolina produces. The sugar of Louisiana comes into our markets and we consume it.

Is it possible that this is a sectional interest? Listening to the arguments of gentlemen on this floor a man would suppose that Pennsylvania had grown to be an immense monopoly that seeks to swallow up every other interest in this country. I was surprised to hear my friend from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] declaiming against this section of the bill. Sir, he told me last year that the only manufactory he had in his district was a little establishment engaged in making agricultural implements. I am not surprised, therefore, at the gentleman's wisdom in regard to protection.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. The gentleman is mistaken. Mine is one of the largest manufacturing districts in Ohio.

Mr. BIERY. Then I am very sorry that the statement made by the gentleman last year should have become so indistinct in my memory.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BIERY. If I am, I beg the gentleman's pardon. But if the gentleman represents here a manufacturing district, then it is much more to his discredit for him to seek to strike down that which makes us a great people. What are we without the development of our interests and resources? What is Pennsylvania, for instance, with all her immense coal and iron deposits, unless those deposits be developed? Of what good is your raw material if you do not work it up at your own doors? Ship your raw materials to England, let her manufacture them and bring them back with her profits charged upon them, and she makes you pay whatever she pleases for the manufactured article, while she fixes the price for the raw material. Thus a fatal blow is struck at your prosperity.

Mr. DAWES. I do not desire to be stringent in reference to debate; but it seems to me desirable that some limit should be fixed. I therefore rise for the purpose—

Mr. POLAND. I desire to say a word, and I hope the gentleman will yield to me before he makes his motion that the committee rise.

Mr. DAWES. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND,] and then I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. MERRIAM. I want to give notice that I have an amendment.

Mr. SHANKS. I object to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] yielding conditionally to the gentleman from Vermont.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that there is any condition whatever. The gentleman from Massachusetts by yielding has lost his right to make his motion.

Mr. DAWES rose, and moved that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the pending section, but yielded to

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have asked the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to yield to me to say a few words, not particularly about anything there is in this bill, but about a matter that has been brought into the debate upon it.

The gentleman from New York, a member of the committee, [Mr. Wood,] made a speech during the general debate on the bill, in which he went out of his way to make an attack upon the recent provisions of the statutes, a work which had been carried through Congress by a committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, and for the correctness of which I acknowledge myself to be properly to a considerable extent responsible. The gentleman in his speech said:

The Revised Statutes, so called, materially increased the tariff duties * * * This result is the product of both the clumsiness of the statutes, as revised, and the mischievous construction of the Treasury Department.

Attached to the gentleman's speech he has had printed in the RECORD a long letter on the subject signed by himself and purporting to be written by him. In that letter, after saying that he acquits the committee having it in charge of any willful design to change the rate of duties on imports, he goes on to say:

Whether any one else inspired changes with such an intent is not so certain. There is certainly much method in some of the alterations. Nor do I impute any blame to the present Secretary of the Treasury, although I am free to say that in my view the person who is referred to by Mr. POLAND as assisting the committee in behalf of the Treasury should not have afterward been selected to put the law in operation and interpret the interpretation. It is estimated that this increase will add $5,000,000 annually to the customs receipts.

Upon a former occasion I stated to the House the source of all these attacks upon that portion of the revision which concerns the tariff.

The papers in New York City and some others during the summer and fall were full of articles attacking the revision of the tariff, and long lists of articles were paraded upon which it was alleged that duties had been raised by reasons of changes of the law made by the revision. They went before the country, uncontradicted, of course, because neither the officers of the Government nor those concerned in making the revision could properly enter into a newspaper war with a New York customs broker. The person to whom I refer even went so far as to get up petitions to the President, asking him to suspend the operation of that part of the Revised Statutes by proclamation. His views of the power of the President were about as correct as his knowledge of the tariff revision. But these incessant attacks upon the revision circulated through the press and unanswered did have the effect to make many people believe that some great fault had been committed either by design or carelessness. So general was this belief that in a debate in the Senate a few days since an eminent Senator, who is himself a most excellent lawyer and a man who would not knowingly do injustice to anything or anybody, said, in speaking of the revision:

The Senator is aware of the very trenchant criticism which has been bestowed, and in many cases most justly, upon the revised code as presented. Alterations which were neither authorized nor intended by Congress have appeared in the new code. Changes of duties upon imports have appeared there, and have sub rosa been incorporated into law by the adoption of these Revised Statutes.

It is perfectly evident from all that the Senator said that he spoke from no knowledge derived from any examination made by himself of the law, but had taken it for granted that all the newspaper charges which had gone uncontradicted must be true. No man I know will be more pleased to know than that eminent gentleman that the accusations against the revision are utterly false; and I doubt not he will take pleasure in declaring his confidence in the revision as publicly as he did his want of it. The knowledge that the gentleman from New York has on the subject is evidently just the same and no more. He has never given the matter the slightest attention in any such way as to know whether the revision is correct or not. He has read the newspaper articles, and possibly he may have had the pleasure of personal communication with the author of them, as they reside in the same city. Indeed, there is a very striking and suspicious similarity between the letter purporting to be written by and signed by the gentleman and these newspaper writings. The substance is the same and the language wonderfully like.

It has long been said that great minds are apt to think alike; and I do not know but the same moving cause might not produce similarity in language, either spoken or written. I am sorry the gentleman from New York is not at this moment in his seat that I might ask him if he knows who made the revision of the chapters relating to the tariff. I do not believe he knows, even after writing so learned a letter on the subject.

Gentlemen who have given any attention to the history of the revision know that the work was done by three commissioners appointed by the President. The work of the tariff part was done by Mr. Abbott, an eminent lawyer of the gentleman's own city, a man specially eminent for his knowledge of the statutes of the United States, having made a digest of them years ago, besides being the author of other legal works. The gentleman from New York will hardly claim that Mr. Abbott was not a competent person to do the work well, or that he would be likely to have any special hostility to that much-abused class of persons, the merchants of New York. When the revision came before Congress for action, it was referred of course to the committee which had charge of that subject. It was of course parceled out to the different members to make careful scrutiny of all parts to see whether the law had been accurately stated. The portion relating to the tariff and for the collection of tariff duties was not assigned to myself at first.

Great anxiety was felt by many persons in Congress and out of it as to that part of the revision. Everybody knew, who had any knowledge of the subject, the disgraceful condition of the statutes relating to the tariff and the almost impossibility of ascertaining what the law was. But it was regarded as a most ticklish subject. It was said that by the wrong use of a comma the Government had been really cheated out of several hundred thousand dollars of duties. One gentleman in Congress told me he proposed to offer a resolution to leave all relating to the tariff out of the revision because of the great danger that by some such mischance we might strike down some of the great industries of the country. But I was unwilling to have it said that the law on any subject had become so disordered that it could not be translated correctly and placed in an intelligible form.

Before that portion of the work was entered upon, the member of my committee to whom it had been assigned was called home by sickness in his family, and I was obliged to take his portion of the work. At the request of the Committee on Ways and Means Mr. Lorin Blodgett, one of the general appraisers at Philadelphia, was employed to aid me in going over the tariff revision. He was represented to me by the chairman of that committee as having great experience and knowledge of the tariff laws, and as a man of perfect integrity of character.

The work of going over the entire legislation on the subject since the beginning of the Government was very great. The work, as left by the commissioners, was very well done, considering the mass of disjointed and incongruous matter it had to be made out of. We found an occasional error and more omissions, but these were not generally in the rates of duty, and very few indeed were altered from the report of the commissioners. The effort in all cases was to exactly state the existing law.

In the attacks on the tariff part of the revision by this New York gentleman, Mr. Blodgett has been brought in largely; indeed, he has been charged as the principal in the mischief, and myself rather as the subordinate.

I have before publicly borne testimony to the value of the services of Mr. Blodgett. I take pleasure in again doing so. He was possessed of very great and very accurate knowledge of the tariff laws, and it has never been my fortune to be associated with any gentleman whose action evinced more sincere desire to do perfect and exact justice. Our labor on the tariff revision extended over several weeks, and that portion of the work undoubtedly received a much larger and more thorough examination than any other part of the work.

Every change in the work of the Commissioners was reported to and explained to the full committee, and none adopted unless sanctioned by them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have to say that the tariff part of the revision is undoubtedly the most perfect of any part of the entire work. Members of Congress know well how difficult it must be in the multitude of duties which devolve on us all here to find time for so laborious work as this. I think I know that the faithfulness and diligence of the committee in this work of the revision is known and appreciated by every member of this House; and the confidence they gave the committee has never been paralleled. I feel confident no one of you will ever complain that that confidence was abused.

But, sir, I was saying that the tariff part of this revision was nearer perfect than any other part of it.

It is known to the House that during this session the Committee of Revision have been carefully over the whole volume to correct all errors that could be discovered in the work. I have had the list of articles on which it is said duties have been raised carefully gone over by Judge James and Mr. Durant, who were employed by the Secretary of State to prepare the work for publication. They say there has been no change of law made. I have carefully examined them, and I say there has been no change made. The Secretary of the Treasury says he has examined it and had it examined by experienced experts in the Department, and he says there has been no change.

I have one more authority. I went to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wood] and told him the committee were going carefully over the work to correct all errors, and if he could point out any we should be glad to have him do so, that we could correct them. He replied that he could not point out any.

But they say higher duties have been collected since the revision than before. How can this be if the law was not changed? The Secretary of the Treasury explained all this in his letter in answer to the resolution of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Wood.] He says the laws were so mixed and doubtful it was often nice and difficult to decide what the duty was. The greatest pressure was always on to get duties down; the subordinates in custom-houses and Departments were not supported by advice, counsel, and argument, and primary decisions were always most strongly against the Government. Obsolete and superseded laws were relied on, and often really made to repeal a later one. The revision wiped all this out and left the essence of all the existing statutes crystallized into a single plain statute, which no ingenuity could warp out of its true intent and meaning. But the gentleman from New York complains of the Secretary for enforcing the law. He should have enforced the old mistaken and erroneous rulings. The Secretary is a gentleman quite competent to take care of himself, and I certainly shall not become his champion until some charge more dangerous than this is brought against him.

But great wrong has been done the merchants of New York? "The merchants of New York" is ever on the tongue of the gentleman from that city, [Mr. WOOD.] He repeats it and accents it, as if they were a higher and better class of men than any others; and he will insist that great wrong has been done them by the Secretary. Why? Because he requires them to pay duties on their imports, such as the law requires. But they had not been required to pay so much, and purchased cargoes, relying upon paying the old rates. This could hardly happen but once, and I hardly believe they failed to add the increased duty to the price to the customers.

I know a few merchants in New York, and I suppose they are pretty much like the rest of the men in the world, neither better nor worse as a class. They have always tried to get the lowest rate of duty on their goods. I do not know that this is different from what other men would have done in like case.

The gentleman from New York says that it is estimated the annual increase of duties by the revision will be $5,000,000 a year. I had always high hopes and great expectations of the value of the revision of the statutes; but I never looked upon it as a great financial measure. But according to the gentleman, it has proved so; and if true, and I think it is to a degree, I have and so has the country another cause of rejoicing in the completion of the work.

The gentleman from New York argues as if this $5,000,000 was wrongfully exacted from the merchants.

Now, there is a good deal in the way of putting things. Another and far more correct way of putting this is that for years the importing merchants have been defrauding the Government out of $5,000,000 every year. The hardship is that they cannot do it any longer, and the Revised Statutes must bear the blame. If this be true, the people of the country will not think the less of the revision.

I desire to say, in conclusion, that in my judgment not only the bench and bar of the country, but the whole people owe a debt of gratitude to the gentlemen who made the revision for placing the laws of the nation not only within reach but within reason. The perhaps still more difficult task of perfecting it and carrying it through to adoption, which was done by myself and colleagues, is sufficiently rewarded by seeing the work completed.

Mr. SHANKS. Mr. Chairman, if I believed this increase of revenue was necessary to carry on the Government I should vote for it. I am always willing to take the responsibility of adding to the burdens of the people wherever such an increase is necessary for properly administering the operations of the Government; but I am not willing to vote any more than that. And when I learn on this floor that it is not necessary to meet the expenses of the Government, then I think it is not necessary to have it passed, and I shall oppose this measure. I shall vote against the increase of 10 per cent., because it is not necessary in order to provide for the expenses of the Government.

That is what I wished to say and all I wished to say. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. DOBBINS,] and hope he will have his own five minutes besides.

Mr. DOBBINS. I am very much obliged to my friend from Indiana for his kindness. I am sorry to differ from my friend in opinion. I am a practical farmer from New Jersey. My friend from New York [Mr. COX] remarked on Thursday that he would he had a trumpet's voice, by which he might talk to the farmers of the country. I have been a practical man, sir, for the last forty years. A certain writer has said—

'Twere wise to talk to our past hours,
And ask them what report they bore,
And how they might have borne more welcome news.

I have been an observer, sir, as well as a practical man, and I have invariably found that under a low tariff or the free-trade system the practical bearing of it was general devastation and want. The business interests of the country have generally suffered and suffered materially. And, sir, I believe that our interests are mutual; that when the great manufacturing interests of the country are prosperous, then all are prosperous.

Who are the great consumers of the country? Five-sixths of them are the workingmen of the country, and if they have nothing to do and no money to pay for their produce, the result is that the farmer has no market.

I put away a few thousand bushels of potatoes in my cellar last fall. And why? Simply because I could not sell them as I usually did. But I was informed by my good wife when I was at home the other day that the very best thing that I could do would be to hire another man to help to carry them out to give them to the people who were idle in the country. If our factories were in active operation, and these people were employed, I could have sold my potatoes last fall for liberal prices and been benefited by the money. Thus as a farmer I should have been advantaged.

My learned friend from New York imparted this piece of information, that the plow of the farmer was at least in part made of iron, and that his mowing-machine was in part made of iron, and that his wagon was in part made of iron, and that this tariff would tend to increase the price of those articles in the market, and consequently the farmer would have to pay more for them. Well, sir, what does the farmer care for all that so long as he has a good home market, when the very first load of perishable produce he takes to his neighbors and sells would remunerate him enough to pay all the advance in price on his implements. And then, sir, his plow and his reaping-machine and his wagon would last him for years to come, and he could use them without any increased cost.

Upon philosophical principles, sir, water will find its level; and if there is any protection to the working men of our country, as a necessary consequence they must be reduced in their wages to a par with the wages paid the paupers of Europe. This protection, this 10 per cent., acts as a dam between the two ponds. We are not ready to indorse the idea that our workingmen shall come down to a shilling a day.

I would like to tell an amusing anecdote, if it is admissible, which is just in point. A son of the Emerald Isle called on me to buy a bushel of potatoes. He asked me my price. I told him $1 a bushel. That was when we had a tariff for protecting our business. "Out upon ye," said he; "in the old country I could buy them for a shilling." "Could you, Pat," said I; "then why didn't you stay there and buy them?" "Ah, Mr. DOBBINS," said he, "that's the devil of it, where to get the shilling from; that was the trouble."

Mr. STORM. I am opposed to this section of the bill, and I shall not vote for the bill at all. It will be remembered that the only response which the Forty-second Congress made to the demand of the country in 1872 for a modification of the revenue system and a reduction of taxation was this very slight reduction of 10 per cent. And now, that being all that was accomplished by that Congress in that direction, you propose to undo it by this last section of the bill under consideration.

I am opposed to the former sections of the bill, which provide for a tax of $1 per gallon on distilled spirits. I think that it is too high. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has argued that the rates should be determined by the amount which could be honestly collected. I say there is another consideration which must enter into that question—the consideration of diminished production; because if you diminish production by the increase of taxation, as a matter of revenue you gain nothing by it.

In my opinion the duty both on distilled spirits and tobacco is too high and will diminish the production of those articles and thereby diminish the revenue. I believe that 70 cents per gallon is a high enough duty, and that 20 cents per pound is a high enough duty on tobacco; but I would have been willing to have gone as high as 80 cents on whisky, leaving tobacco where it is.

Sir, I am opposed to the restoration of the 10 per cent. upon principle. My distinguished colleague [Mr. SPEER] believes that this whole question of protection and free trade is based on no principle, and that each of the congressional districts of the United States should settle that question for itself. I believe that this question of protection and free trade is a question of principle, and I cannot see how what is right in one congressional district can be wrong in another. I would no more leave this question to the congressional districts, so far as principle is concerned, than I would leave it to be settled by the congressional districts whether robbery is right or wrong.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Is my colleague in favor of free trade?

Mr. STORM. I am in favor of free trade if a tariff for revenue alone is "free trade," and have always been so, and I believe that the curse to-day of Pennsylvania is that her members of Congress are here in the character of mendicants begging favors at the hands of the national Government. And the ruin that now prevails in Pennsylvania is owing to the high tariff by which you have overstimulated production, until pig iron and railroad iron are piled up mountain high, and for which there is no market. I indorse the doctrine of Mr. David A. Wells, that after all a high tariff defeats itself; and it makes no difference how high you lay it, a higher duty will soon be required.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Does not my colleague know that the rise of 10 per cent. will increase protection in his State; and that the 10 per cent. reduction did not make iron any cheaper, but gave the foreign manufacturer the advantage of the difference, which was about $12 a ton? Competition reduces prices.

Mr. STORM. I know that you can go to all the large iron manufacturing factories of Pennsylvania—and it has been so for more than a year past—and find an immense amount of iron on hand for which there is no market. I will say to my colleague [Mr. ALBRIGHT] that the difficulty is not the want of a tariff but of a market. There has been an overproduction in pig and railroad iron, and no amount of protection beyond that already enjoyed will make a market. Truly, if Pennsylvania is not now satisfied, then indeed "protection does not protect." I yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SMITH.]

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I thank God that there is one Representative of Pennsylvania on this floor who looks to something besides the particular interests of his State. I was trying to say when the hammer fell upon me before that the Committee on Ways and Means had introduced a bill which was intended and the purpose of which was to raise the price of all articles consumed by the people of the country. Now, I want gentlemen from the West and the South to go home, if they please, and to go home if they dare and tell their people that they have voted to raise the price of all the articles necessary to their industries.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 70, noes 56.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES and Mr. ELDREDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 90. So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HALE, of Maine, reported that the Committee of the Whole had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4680) to protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tariff bill, and pending that motion I move that all debate on the section now pending in the committee be closed in thirty minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move to amend that motion by striking out "thirty minutes" and inserting "one hour," and I do so for the reason—

The SPEAKER. A motion to close debate is not debatable.

The question was taken on the amendment, and on a division there were—ayes 74, noes 72.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. DAWES to close debate, as amended, and being put, it was agreed to.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. DAWES that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and being put, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HALE, of Maine, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4680) to protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government.

Mr. HUBBELL obtained the floor and yielded to Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. KELLEY. I thank the gentleman from Michigan for his courtesy, as I desire in justice to my friend from New York [Mr. COX] to say that when on Thursday I referred to the fact that the farmers of Ohio had driven him out as an indignity, I did not mean to imply, as it appears some understood me, that they had actually driven him out by physical force. I mean that they had done it constructively; that as a seat in Congress is essential to his existence, they forced him to leave that State when they refused to elect him, and compelled him to go to one in which he could be elected. This is shown by his experience in New York. In his brief career in that city he has represented three districts, and would, had he received votes enough, have represented the State as member at large. They gerrymandered him out of a district there as he says they did in Ohio; but by some means or other a gentleman who had been elected in a district in which he could be elected suddenly died, and here by the aid of death he turns up again.

He would, I apprehend, like to go to Canada to get cheap clothing. He may even now be negotiating for a seat in the parliament of the Dominion, because he cannot live unless he is in a representative body, though he might get his clothes more cheaply. As a gentleman behind me says, he is a peripatetic philosopher and statesman, but he must be a representative or he feels that he is not.

As regards the allusion to his speech having been frequently made, did he not read it from a yellow-covered copy of the ninth edition, which was laid upon the desks of members while he was making it the last time he made it preceding yesterday? Every gentleman had a nice "yaller-kivered" copy laid on his desk, which I hope he will lay aside in lavender and keep for years. If he does so and keeps the successors he will in a few years have a large volume of that speech; for if my friend does not come back from New York he will carpet-bag—I mean he will take his carpet-bag and trunk, too, and go somewhere else where he can find a constituency who love free trade and drollery.

Now I beg leave to say that there is no statesmanship in piling thousands per cent. of taxes on our domestic products, in burdening our own people with taxation, when by adjusting tariff duties we can make the foreign manufacturers pay the expenses of our Government for the privilege of enjoying our market—the best market in the world. Yet the theory of the gentleman is, let the foreigner enter and control our market free of restraint, and reduce the wages of our laborers, reduce the profits on the products of the farm. That is his philosophy, and that will be the effect of this bill. It will so reduce the farmer's net result from his wheat and corn that is distilled, it will so reduce the planter's net result from his tobacco, that they cannot as freely as they now do consume imported and dutiable goods. It brings the burdens of the Government all home to our own people and lays them upon the fields tilled by the sweat of our farmers and planters. I do not wonder that he goes to Canada for his clothes. His whole policy is that our labor should be degraded to the level of that of other lands.

Mr. BECK. When I had the floor last I was endeavoring to show the pernicious effect of a high tariff, especially on silks and silk-mixed goods, on the revenue. Before I resume that subject I desire again to call attention to the charge made over and over again by gentlemen on the other side, which is really untrue, that those who oppose this bill are endeavoring to repudiate the obligations of the Government by refusing to furnish the necessary revenues. I showed the other day, and no man can deny it, that we have reduced our public debt since 1865 over $600,000,000, nearly one-fourth of the whole war debt, and we have spent all the proceeds of the immense war material we had on hand, and all the proceeds of the sales of our ships, and everything else, if honestly expended, in paying off our floating indebtedness. No people ever before paid so much of such a debt in the same length of time, and no creditors ever had such security as ours. So much for the charge of repudiation and want of good faith which has been so freely made, without a shadow of foundation therefor.

This bill is urged upon us on the pretense that the Administration needs money; it was not brought forward as a measure of protection but to put money at this time into the Treasury. I assert that every feature of the bill is a failure in that regard. The increased tax on whisky, as the Secretary and all other well-informed men tell us, and as all past experience proves, will diminish the revenue from five to ten million of dollars annually, instead of adding to it. It will enable public officials to combine with producers and defraud the Government as they did in 1868, both in regard to whisky and tobacco, and the revenue will be diminished instead of increased. A few men may make money out of stocks on hand, but honest dealers will suffer in their regular business.

One thing seems to be admitted in this debate which I am very glad to hear, which is that the consumers of products pay the increased price caused by additional taxation. If they do so in regard to goods taxed by internal revenue, why not in those things that are reached by the tariff? I say they do so in both cases. The only excuse now made for the increased tax on tobacco and whisky is that the consumers all over the country pay it. Do not the consumers pay the tax as well on all tariff-taxed articles? Of course they do. I believe in fostering the industries of the country, but I believe in fostering legitimate industries in a legitimate way. I do not believe in creating artificial industries and taxing all the people to sustain them. I would not limit our orange market to New Hampshire. I am not a free-trader in one sense of the word. I am in favor of a revenue tariff, where the money collected from the people shall go into the Treasury of the United States and not go to enrich a few at the expense of the whole. I admit that we must keep up a revenue system by taxing imports.

I do not believe we can collect our revenues otherwise until the Constitution of the United States is changed. If we undertake to collect them by direct taxation, it must be done now according to population. Under such a system the impoverished States of the South and the comparatively poor States of the West would pay five or six times as much in proportion to their means as the wealthy people of New York and New England. I hope the Constitution will be changed some day by striking out "population" and inserting "wealth;" and then we can collect direct taxes according to the basis of wealth instead of population, for it is certainly true that the property of a country and not its poverty should bear its burdens.

But waiving that, I was about to show when the hammer fell, the effect on the revenue of some of the provisions of the "little tariff bill" passed the other day in regard to silk goods. I have an amendment to it which I hope to make part of this bill, and therefore take this occasion to call attention to it. We consume annually about $70,000,000 worth of silk goods in this country. The consumption would be the same whether the goods were manufactured here or abroad. And the price to the consumer would remain the same, as we do not manufacture enough to affect in the slightest degree their price in the markets of the world. If all silks used in this country were manufactured abroad they would yield a revenue of $42,000,000 annually at the present tariff rates. But Congress has undertaken to foster what is falsely called an American industry. There are a few silk manufacturers in New Jersey and elsewhere. You have given them their raw material free, which is on the average half the value of the manufactured products, and you have imposed a duty of 60 per cent. in gold upon the importation of the manufactured articles. Thus you have given a few home manufacturers who pay no revenue a protection equal to 120 per cent. in gold. The result is that the Government, instead of getting $42,000,000 of revenue which the amount of silk used in this country would produce, is getting about $17,000,000 by this system which gentlemen on this floor laud so highly. Over $30,000,000 is collected from the consumers, rich and poor alike, and goes into the pockets of a few people who have less than $15,000,000 invested in their business and who employ less than two thousand heads of families.

As I said before, I repeat, when the people have to pay high prices for what they use the Government ought to get the benefit of the increased cost. The benefit should not go to enrich a few favored individuals. We could afford to pay to the silk manufacturers all the capital they have invested, to pension all their hands, and still have a surplus of several millions during the present year, and $42,000,000 instead of $17,000,000 every year hereafter. That is the way your protective tariff works.

Mr. MYERS. The great want of the Government at the present time is revenue. The need of the people at all times is protection to life, property, and business.

During the war money and men were offered without stint in order to save the country. When the war ceased we lifted the heaviest burdens of taxation from the people who had borne them so willingly, but foolishly boasting that we would pay off the national debt, all our surplus receipts were devoted to that purpose until now we find an almost empty exchequer. How shall it be replenished; how shall the necessary expenses of the Government be met? Internal taxation is unpopular. You cannot tax the necessities of life without great complaint. Internal taxes must be chiefly raised upon luxuries. What source of revenue then remains? Only the duties on imports.

This tariff question a few years ago divided the two great parties of the country. The whigs favored a tariff for protection with revenue as an incident. The democrats said they wished a tariff for revenue, the protection being incidental. And now, for the first time in many years during a period of peace, there is a chance of testing the sincerity of the democratic party.

The bill before us is for the purpose of raising revenue; yet a large majority of the democratic members here—not all of them—like the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] are bitterly fighting the bill because it affords incidental protection. Pennsylvania manufacturers, with what he terms their legalized robbery, troubled his distorted vision, and a few so-called revenue reformers, like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. J. Q. SMITH,] I am sorry to say, join in his cry of distress. I am sick of this sectional folly. Sir, there is no American industry in this country antagonistic to another. There is not one which, duly protected, does not give a healthier growth to many others.

We cannot build up our commerce on either ocean by striking a blow at American ship-builders or purchasing our vessels on the Clyde. We cannot aid our farmers to sell their grain by paralyzing every trade and mechanic art. We cannot bring prosperity to the land by arresting the progress of manufactures and driving the people of the cities into want. Yet all these mistakes the gentleman from New York proposes to make, as he often has done before. His theories are in favor of the laborer, but not the American laborer, not the American ship-builder or mechanic or worker in the arts. I do not object that his suit of clothes was, as he boasts, purchased in Canada for thirty dollars, but I do protest against his objection that a like suit in this country would cost fifty dollars. If so, the twenty dollars' difference goes to the American wool-grower, to the working people at home—such as those who in my own district made the suit which I have on; to the American tailors and sewing-women, to whom I am glad to pay better wages than they can earn in other lands. O, no! This is the old siren song, "Buy at the cheapest market," where pauper labor produces, and close the workshops at home.

Did I say close them? That is half done already. There are a million working-people in the land unemployed looking to Congress for relief, and when we are absolutely driven to extremities for revenue, do not let us begrudge the means which will at the same time lift them into employment and comfort. Start the wheels of trade in the iron, cotton, woolen, and other branches of manufactures to be affected by this section, and every industry of the nation will take new life from it. The blow aimed at them by the reduction of this duty of 10 per cent. two years ago was struck without a note of warning. Until the financial crisis came it was not so severely felt, but to-day over three hundred of the largest woolen and cotton mills lie idle, half the furnaces in the country are out of blast, and many forges quenched. The factories are on half time, or with less than half their usual employés, and the ship-yards almost vacant. No wonder the farmers complain, when so many thousands find it difficult to buy the necessities of life. The land is as rich as ever. I believe prosperity will soon be restored; but when we need increased revenue and can incidentally start into new life a hundred American industries, the friends of the importers of foreign goods plead for the cheap products of pauper labor abroad, and standing in the gate-way of trade refuse the entrance of a fair competition to our own artisans and sons of toil.

Against this wrong I protest in the name of all the American people.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan, obtained the floor but yielded to Mr. FIELD.

Mr. FIELD. I have one word to say to the Committee of the Whole with reference to prices. The duties we impose upon foreign productions imported do not affect the prices of the articles here. The duties which we levy upon those products come out of the pocket of the foreigner.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I rise to a point of order. I understand that the Chair ruled that no gentleman should speak twice on the same section as long as there were other gentlemen who desired to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WILLIAMS] having been recognized by the Chair had a right to yield his time to his colleague. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FIELD] will proceed.

Mr. FIELD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to have the committee understand clearly that the duties we impose on these foreign productions come out of the pockets of the foreigners. They are not paid by our people at all, and do not affect prices here.

These commodities mentioned in the section now under consideration are more largely produced in this country, and as prices are fixed by the law of supply and demand, the European producer takes the American market price for his products, and when he goes home he goes home with those prices less the duty he has been required to pay. Let this be understood plainly, that the foreigner does not fix prices in this country. He takes the American market price for the products, and when duties are imposed the amount comes out of his pocket. During the last fiscal year over a million bushels of wheat were imported, and on that quantity of wheat the Canadian farmers have paid into the Treasury the duties, amounting to over $250,000 in gold. Every one knows that the American consumers do not pay the duty. It was paid by the Canadian farmers, and the money has gone into the Treasury of the Government. The duty is 20 cents per bushel. And has this duty increased the price of wheat all over our country 20 cents a bushel? I should be glad to have it so operate. It would be a happy thing for our farmers if by raising the duties on wheat we could raise the price of our wheat in this country. But such is not the case.

And here is the duty on corn of 10 per cent. a bushel. Does that duty raise the price of corn 10 cents a bushel? Why, sir, when I traveled on the western prairies I found the price of corn was only 8 cents a bushel; therefore, on the theory advanced by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. COTTON,] the farmer out there would have to pay 2 cents a bushel to have his corn taken off his hands.

Mr. COTTON. I claim that in opposing this increase of duties on manufactured articles we are consulting both the interests of the manufacturer and the interests of the farmer. The manufacturer, in consequence of the high rate of duties, has obtained upon manufactured articles such an artificial price that he has destroyed the foreign market for his productions. I desire to call attention to the fact that while we have a duty of from 50 to 100 per cent. on woolen goods, our exports of that class of goods for the last fiscal year amounted to but $196,000, while of the farmers' produce there was exported to the amount of $101,000,000 of wheat alone. High duties have destroyed the foreign market for the manufacturer. He is limited to his own territory. Foreign trade for him is entirely cut off. These high duties therefore have proved an obstruction to the increase and extension of his business and trade. They even have the effect, by increasing the cost of production, to disable him from retaining his own home market, and foreign goods continue to come in however high the duties may be placed. It is evident that under this sort of tariff nursing we will never be able to stand alone, as was promised years ago we could soon do if only protected for a season while manufactures were in their infancy.

On the other hand, the farmer must take for the produce he has to sell the prices of a foreign market. He is compelled to compete with the so-called pauper labor so much talked of on this floor, and he is the only producer in this country who is compelled to compete with that labor. A large portion of what he has for sale must find a market abroad, and whether the products of the farmer are sold in Europe or in this country, the Liverpool prices control the prices he must accept. Those prices determine the prices in New York, the latter those in Chicago, and finally the prices in the local markets in Iowa at which a farmer of that State makes his sales are gauged according to the Chicago market; and hence the farmer, while compelled to pay the manufacturer of this country, sheltered and protected by high duties, prices much in excess of what the same articles could be purchased for in the foreign market, must take for his products the prices of that foreign market, and he can have no more than is paid for grain raised in Europe by what is called pauper labor. He is compelled under these high-tariff duties to pay the manufacturers of this country a bonus above what he could purchase the same goods for in the European market that regulates the prices of what he sells, and moreover the cost of transportation is largely increased by the additional cost of railroads and of operating them caused by high tariffs. Manufacturers have debarred themselves of the power to export. There is exported no more of cotton goods, woolen goods, iron, and manufactures of iron than was exported ten years ago, and the amount exported of these articles is but a trifle in comparison to the exports of farm products.

Why, sir, the export of all the iron and manufactures of iron, cotton goods, and woolen goods, does not amount to as much as the export of the single article of cheese, nor to one-half of the value of the lard that is exported.

I shall incorporate with my remarks a table taken from the report of October, 1874, of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, for the purpose of showing how little is exported of manufactured goods and what do constitute the exports, from which it will appear that they consist in great part of bread and breadstuffs, provisions, cotton, tobacco, petroleum, and gold and silver.

Those who favor adding this 10 per cent. to the duties say establish manufactures at the West, and thus make a home market for the farmers of that part of the country. Why, sir, this cannot be done, because by the high-tariff duties there has been destroyed the foreign market for manufactured goods. They have been made to cost so much that they cannot be sold except in this country. There would be no place to sell the additional articles which it is proposed should be made by factories to be established in the West. High tariffs have brought this nation to the unfortunate condition of being compelled to wear out in this country all the goods that are made here, as the manufacturers have destroyed their power to compete in foreign markets. They complain that they cannot find a market for what is now being produced, and insist on more tariff and more protection. So there is no room for building up manufactures in the West. The farmers must continue to find a market in other countries for much of their produce, and will be under the necessity of taking prices controlled by the foreign market; and while this is the case, it is unequal and unjust that they should be made to pay extra prices to the manufacturers.

The following is the table referred to by Mr. COTTON:

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the fifth section these words:
Provided, That emery ore shall, from the passage hereof, be subject to no duty or tax whatever.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a question of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the 10 per cent. tax apply to emery?

Mr. DAWES. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention to what was contained in that amendment. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] had something to say yesterday about there being no dividing lines. I am not particularly instructed or informed upon this matter, but there is a tradition here which I have heard circulated around the Hall that up to within a recent period emery ore was free, but that recently there has been discovered in a certain district of Massachusetts emery mines, and the influence of my respected friend from Massachusetts enabled a duty to be placed on it at three or four dollars a ton for the benefit of citizens of a particular district. Now, sir, I am not scared about the question of protection of free trade, but I should be glad to see my amendment adopted. It is an article which is equally used all over the country, and I call upon you men from Pennsylvania, Ohio, and the West to see that this tax is not levied for the benefit of men in one little locality. I look upon it as unjust that these taxes should be imposed upon the farmers and mechanics of the country for such purposes; and I trust the gentleman, enlarged as he is by broad views, not limited by the lines of any district, will see that this tax is not levied for the benefit of his constituents at the expense of men all over the country.

Mr. DAWES. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to express my admiration of that breadth of statesmanship, that sublime consideration of the subject, irrespective of persons, which has so distinguished the brief career of the gentleman from Illinois in this House. It only amazes me it should not have impressed itself more on his admiring constituents. If there ever was anything like ingratitude, it must come home to the gentleman from Illinois, that his constituents are of all other men the most ungrateful; for if my memory serves me, the gentleman has devoted a career which commenced and will terminate with the present Congress to the personalities of discussion.

He seems to have discovered something now about emery ore. I wish to tell him that if he had studied facts more than prejudice he would not have made that speech, as there is no foundation of facts on which to make it. He found it, or it had its birth in the New York Sun; and if any gentleman wants to find anything that is not the truth, I commend him to that interesting paper.

Now, to begin with, I never moved in my life anything pertaining to emery in the world. The House of Representatives, not I, moved by the fact that citizens in the States of North Carolina and Virginia, within a few years, had discovered the finest bed of emery in the known world, and another one in the State of Maine, thought it quite an object to emancipate the United States from the Rothschilds, who owned all the emery outside of the United States; and for that purpose they put back the duty to what it had been, $3 a ton. After it had been put back folks in New York thought that on a piece of land which they owned in my district there was some emery. They tried to work it, and they could not do it; that is all there is about it. The New York Sun and my distinguished friend from Illinois may have the benefit of all that they can find; there is no track of mine in it; and while I welcome my friend in the highest sphere, I only importune his constituents not to let this brilliant light go out in the night of a single Congress.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Chairman, in the limited time allowed for debate, I first desire to call the attention of the committee to the views of a member from Pennsylvania upon the subject of the tariff. I refer to the remarks of my democratic friend from the eleventh district [Mr. STORM] made awhile ago. I believe, with but one exception in the House of Representatives of the United States during the last ten years, he is the only member from Pennsylvania who has had the boldness to avow free-trade doctrines upon this floor.

I have seen many democrats before election in the State of Pennsylvania who were terribly in favor of a judicious tariff. I have seen such democrats all over our State when running for Congress shielding themselves under the term of a judicious tariff, and some such were elected in November last. But I never until now, save with the one exception, heard a Pennsylvania Representative here declare himself to be a free-trader.

The idea of the gentleman as to the reason for the immense numbers of tons of pig-iron lying around the country unsold is very remarkable. Does he not know that the general depression of business has caused a depression in that business? Does he not know that the iron business of Pennsylvania and elsewhere in this country has been depressed just as other kinds of business in the country have been depressed?

Mr. Chairman, the State of Pennsylvania has as usual in a tariff debate been referred to as desiring in this respect selfish legislation. The question of a tariff is not a question for a mere locality or for a congressional district or State. It is a national question; and if perchance one State seems to prosper more than another, it is only so comparatively. Prosperity in Pennsylvania is prosperity in Ohio, in Illinois, in Iowa. Material progress and development in the State I in part have the honor to represent means advancement in all other States. The thousands of miles of railroads in this country, especially in the West and the Northwest, were built while the country was prosperous. The five thousand miles of iron roadway in Pennsylvania, nearly the same number of miles in each of the States of Ohio and Illinois, and the railroad system of Iowa, were constructed and developed when the business of the country was stimulated and encouraged by protection, when capital thereby was invested in abundance, and no man's hands were idle who desired employment. It is easily to be seen in looking back but a few years that when a tariff for protection was upon our statute-book every industry flourished, and that all public improvements were in rapid progress of completion. Thus it was always just in proportion as we protected our own industries and manufactures that the poor man became richer and the man of capital did not hesitate to invest his means in every channel of business.

In reference to the section under discussion, the restoration of the 10 per cent. duty, I believe its adoption now would stimulate business and give confidence to both capital and labor all over our land. I have no doubt but that its reduction a few years ago was one of the causes of the stagnation in trade, the failure of countless firms, the impoverishment of those depending upon the labor of their hands. The manufactured products of Pennsylvania, as I said before, remain unsold because of the depression of business generally. The fearful crisis of September, 1873, brought ruin and destruction everywhere, and millions of made-up materials are to-day in the market without purchasers. Certainly a protective tariff is not responsible for this condition of things. The financial difficulties of the times are responsible. There is no demand for goods, foreign or domestic. Millions upon millions of importations to-day remain in bond, the importers and merchants from the meagerness of trade being obliged to let their goods be held in the bonded warehouses. I hope sincerely that we will vote for the restoration of the 10 per cent. Its adoption will create confidence, lead to the employment of thousands of people, and assure the country that congressional action will be in the interest of our own industries and not for the benefit of foreign producers.

Mr. Chairman, I am for a protective tariff at all times. I am not for a merely revenue tariff. I favor the imposition of duties upon all imported articles, saving only a most judicious free list to apply only to such raw material as we cannot possibly produce in our own country. I am not an individual tariff man. I am not for a tariff merely in its application to a certain line of industry or to circumscribed limits. My tariff views are for protection to American industry in the abstract, in its broadest sense, and being so I know the products of Pennsylvania will be fully protected and her great resources will continue so to be developed as to mark her out on the map of States and nations as the spot for the thrifty and industrious.

Mr. ATKINS. I have but a word or two to say upon this question. It seems that many gentlemen speak here for their own particular districts. I do not desire to speak particularly for my district, but for the principle. I cannot understand why gentlemen should be in favor of the doctrine of protection. The idea that one portion of the people are to be protected at the expense of another portion of the people is to me altogether wrong. But I cannot discuss the general question in five minutes.

I have risen for the purpose of protesting against the increase of the tax on tobacco. It is believed by those who have studied this question that a tax of 10 cents a pound upon tobacco would produce more revenue than any other rate of taxation.

I also desire to protest against the idea of the Government breaking faith with the men who are interested in the manufacture and sale of whisky, those who have made their purchases and have their stocks on hand. I protest against the idea that they should now have to pay an additional tax of 15 cents a gallon. That to my mind is founded in injustice. I hope that the Government will keep faith with the people. It is strange that the Committee on Ways and Means would advocate a measure that would be founded upon the principle that the Government itself is to break faith with the people.

I desire also to reply briefly to an argument made by my colleague who represents the State at large upon this floor, [Mr. MAYNARD.] He argued for the doctrine of protection; he said that if the mines of coal and iron of Tennessee were protected by a high protective tariff they would be developed. Have we not for the last twelve years had a high protective tariff, and what has been the effect on those mines? The manufacturing interests of Tennessee to-day are at as low an ebb as they ever were in the history of this country. I hold the doctrine that protection would only build up a few individuals even in Tennessee; that if it were applied to the people of Tennessee, it would only be for the benefit of a few individuals at the expense of the great masses of the people. So far as Tennessee is concerned, I ask nothing for Tennessee; I have no sectional feeling; I have no sentiments that confine my patriotism to the State of Tennessee. I want the same principles applied to Tennessee that are applied to the people of this whole Union. We ask no protection; we only ask equality; we only ask justice.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I yield to my colleague [Mr. SPEER] for the purpose of having an extract read, and then I will resume the floor.

Mr. SPEER. In view of the remarkable speech made to-day by my colleague, [Mr. STORM,] I ask to have read an extract from a carefully prepared speech of his on the tariff bill, to be found in the Congressional Globe, of May 2, 1872.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pennsylvania has been sneered at because her Representatives, like the Representatives from other States, have looked after her interests. As the able Representatives of Illinois and Indiana adhere to the most objectionable and questionable income tax; as the Representatives of New York watch with proper care the commercial interests of that State, so do the Representatives of Pennsylvania endeavor to care for her interests on this floor. And if we can in the future as we have in the past induce a sufficient number of gentlemen of this House to vote with us, it will either prove that we are right or that our powers of persuasion are greater than those of our opponents.

No State will be so much affected by a change of tariff duties as Pennsylvania. Her vast coal-fields furnish the fuel for the nation. Her oil wells supply it with light. Her furnaces, rolling-mills, foundries, machine-shops supply the farmer with his implements of husbandry, the artisan and mechanic with his tools, the railway with its track and rolling-stock, the ship-builder with the materials out of which he constructs his vessel.

A State so affected by tariff legislation has a right as a member of the Federal Union to see that her interests are not sacrificed. * * * And I further believe that, having entered upon such a course of legislation for the encouragement of manufactures, Congress should have persisted in a uniform system of legislation until the object was attained.

The instant our manufactures and workshops closed the price would advance, and we would be compelled to pay to British what we now pay to American manufacturers.

I wish to do right; I will not be swerved from it by taunts or considerations of selfishness. I will vote and act as a member of the American Congress, not as a Pennsylvania man.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I propose to say that I do not advocate the restoration of the 10 per cent. duty as a Pennsylvanian simply; I am interested in the prosperity of the whole country. I want to call the attention of the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber to the fact that last year there were built 61 new furnaces, 26 of them in the Southern States. There are in all those States 88 furnaces. The resources of the South and the West, the great mineral wealth, the coal and iron in their soil, need protection as much and more than do the coal-fields and the iron-beds and manufactories of Pennsylvania. The production of iron during the last year in the Southern States was 383,308 tons; the value of that production was $15,332,320. Most of this money represents labor. Now, when the South and the West employ men in their coal-beds and their furnaces and their iron mines, they are furnishing a market for the farmer's grain and pork and beef. The more men you can employ in furnaces and workshops and manufacturing establishments in the East, South, or West, the more men there will be to buy the productions of the farmers, and the greater the prosperity of the country will be.

Now I understand that some men in this House are in favor of taxing American productions, while they are ready to admit duty free the fabrics and goods of the foreigner. I hear men talk of the taxes on whisky and tobacco, and nearly everybody agrees that articles of luxury should be taxed, but tobacco and whisky are the productions of American labor; when you talk of taxing the manufactured goods, however, of the foreigner, it is said the tariff must be reduced. I do not believe in any doctrine like that. I believe that when the God of nature put into our mountains, hills, and valleys the great mineral resources that made them rich, He meant that they should become an element of strength to the American people who thereby should become independent of the products of foreign labor. This tariff is proposed not only for revenue but for protecting incidentally the workshops of our country.

I should not have risen at this time to say a word had not my colleague, [Mr. STORM,] who represents the district in which I reside, declared himself in favor of free trade unconditionally. Sir, my friend represents one of the largest manufacturing districts in Pennsylvania; and it needs protection. There are thousands of men who are now out of employment and who have been knocking at the doors of Congress for protection that will revive their prostrate industries; they have been sending through my colleague petitions that we shall vote for a restoration of these 10 per cent. duties.

Mr. STORM rose.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I cannot yield to the gentleman at this time. I want to say that his constituents do not agree with him in advocating the doctrine of free trade and no employment for idle labor.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURCHARD obtained the floor.

Mr. STORM. I hope I shall have an opportunity to reply to my colleague, [Mr. ALBRIGHT.]

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Chairman, when I made the motion to strike out the pending section I called the attention of the committee to the amount that would be raised by the bill as it stood with the amendments of the Committee of the Whole and to the amount that would be brought into the Treasury by the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction, adopting last year's importation as a basis. No one has controverted the statement I made that the bill with the amendments will give within $1,000,000 of the amount originally proposed by the committee. I then stated, and I repeat, that the wants of the Treasury as presented by the Secretary of the Treasury require for the next fiscal year only $10,000,000. But say that even $20,000,000 will be required, I still insist that the bill as amended and with the fifth section stricken out will give more than the amount needed, and if the section remains will raise over $40,000,000, or double the amount required.

But this debate has taken a wide scope. Gentlemen here on one side and the other have brought in the subject of protection, revenue, and free trade. I do not wish now, I did not wish then, to discuss those questions. But gentlemen having referred to me and some remarks which I have made, I wish to say a word in reply.

They tell us in protection circulars and speeches that a reduction of the rate of duties will flood the country with foreign commodities. And yet the gentleman from Connecticut quotes some Treasury statistics that I presented, and shows that even that 10 per cent. reduction did not flood the country with foreign commodities; but on the contrary, after the reduction the importation of those commodities fell off. The total importations, it is true, fell off in 1874 from the amount in 1873, but they did not fall off as much on other dutiable imports as they did upon those to which the 10 per cent. reduction applied. And why? Because the duties on the latter articles are higher. The average rate of duties on all the dutiable imports entering into consumption in the United States in 1874 was 38.5 per cent., while the average rate of duty on the articles to which the 10 per cent. reduction applied remained after the reduction 42 per cent. In consequence, while there was a falling off of $81,000,000 in 1874 from the $497,000,000 of total dutiable imports of 1873, the greater part of the decrease was in the falling off of the importations of the articles embraced in the 10 per cent. reduction. The Bureau of Statistics shows that the importations of all dutiable articles were in—

Decrease.....	81,395,746

The Bureau gives the importations of articles embraced in the 10 per cent. reduction for the fiscal years—

1873.....	$202,000,000
Decrease.....	61,000,000

The importation of all dutiable articles in 1874, compared with 1873, fell off 16 per cent., while the importation of the articles upon which the duty is sought by this section to be increased fell off 30 per cent.

The 10 per cent. reduction does not seem to have flooded the country with foreign goods of the same kind. The domestic producers under the reduction not only hold their own, but crowd out the foreign productions of the same kind.

Then, again, I want to ask the gentlemen who are so clamorous for the increase of these duties, and who represent manufacturing and mining States and portions of the Union, why do you insist upon the increased duty? You either expect it will raise prices, and so help you, or that it will shut out foreign goods. If it shuts out foreign goods it will reduce the revenues, and it is as a revenue measure we are asked to support this bill. If it will raise prices you do it for the interest of less than half a million workers in these industries at the expense of over twelve million workers in all the other industries of the country. And I say it is not fair to single out a few classes, scarcely 3 per cent. of the workers of the country, and assess the benefits upon the other classes.

You come here and say it is in the interest of labor. You ask it as if there were no laborers in the country except those engaged in the manufacturing industry; as if the farmers who work under the broiling summer's sun, often from early dawn till late at night, are not laborers and have not interests to be looked to.

Mr. DAWES. Gentlemen have debated this measure as if it were a demand to put more money into the Treasury of the United States. That is a mistake. From no quarter, executive or legislative, does there come up a demand to put more money into the Treasury. It is to supply a deficiency, not to produce more money for the Treasury. Those having the responsibility of the carrying on of the Government do not ask more money, but are content with less than they had before. But they do ask, inasmuch as the revenues are falling short and there does not come into the Treasury as much as heretofore or enough to meet the obligations of the Government, that new sources of revenue shall be sought out. It is not because they want more, but because the necessities of the Government, not greater to-day than before, are nevertheless such that the Government must have more revenue than is now yielded; and as industries change, as revenues change, as more comes from one source, less from another, in the varying and ever-shifting of pursuits all over this country, the taxes and the duties must shift like them. Hence this bill.

Now, sir, the debate, which seems strongly to have taken a sectional turn, is answered, the whole of it, by the history of this very 10 per cent. reduction. The East are charged with an attempt to restore the 10 per cent. reduction. In their interest I am arraigned here. Why, sir? How came this 10 per cent. reduction about? Did not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] tell you here yesterday that I was responsible for it. If, therefore, the restoration of it is in the interest of the East, the reduction of it two years ago, when at that time we did not need a revenue, came from the East.

Just look at this in another view. Suppose it to be true and admitted, as gentlemen contend, that this 10 per cent. restoration is a tax; still it is a tax of more equal distribution than any other. It enters into the consumption of the whole country alike. It rests upon one portion just as much as it does upon the other, and if you need this $8,000,000 to meet the obligations of the Government, what more just, what more equitable tax can be devised than that which is distributed all over the country? Everybody that consumes any portion of these articles contributes just to the extent of his consumption. But to those who believe, as I do, that this 10 per cent. restoration brings eight millions into the Treasury without a tax and at the same time revives industry, that is an argument in favor of it.

Why, sir, I have a table here which I produced two years ago, which shows that New England has lost her prestige in manufacturing; that in the last ten years the manufacturers have gone to the West and to the Southwest; and while in 1860 New England had two-thirds of them all, in 1870 two-thirds of them all, according to the census, had gone there.

Mr. KASSON obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. DAWES.

Mr. DAWES. Now, I want to say further that it is true that New England does not desire this restoration. It is true that New England manufactures, better than any others in the United States, can stand without its restoration; because New England—and that is the secret of her prosperity—adapts herself quicker and with more efficiency in the existing state of things than any other portion of the country. In the year 1824 she was a commercial country; engaged almost entirely in commerce. The policy of this country then changed to that of a protective tariff, destroying her commerce and depriving her of her pursuit of commerce, and she turned herself immediately to the new order of things, and under that policy which encourages manufactures all over the country she has become a manufacturing region. It is true to-day that the cotton manufacture of New England can compete with the cotton manufactures of the world. I ask gentlemen, then, not to vote for or against this bill because New England desires it. New England would be better pleased if it fails, but New England believes that $8,000,000 will be brought into the Treasury in this way easier than by a tax on whisky and tobacco or any other tax in the world, and therefore New England yields, as she always has done in every one of the many changes upon this subject, to the existing state of things and the necessities of the country.

Now, sir, here is a source of revenue which as any one will see is an equal tax. Here is a means of bringing to the Treasury $8,000,000 and at the same time building up the languishing industries of the country and giving employment to the hungry, starving laborers of the land, satisfying the public press of the country and strengthening the courage of those who toil at the anvil and the loom, and giving to capital confidence and building up the industries of the country. That is why two years ago I did what I did, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, to bring about this reduction, and why now I am for this restoration. I am for it, first, because the demands of the Treasury require it; second, because of all sources of revenue that can be devised this more equally than any other distributes itself over the entire land, applying to every industry affected by it, to every man who consumes its products, to every man who furnishes supplies for the comfort of those engaged in it, to every school-house that is built in the villages of those that congregate around these establishments, to every church to which they go on the Sabbath day to thank God for the daily bread upon their table.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon section 5 is closed.

Mr. EAMES. I move to amend the text of the bill by inserting the following:

And so much of section 3437 of the Revised Statutes as imposes a stamp tax on the articles mentioned in Schedule A of said section, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, to take effect on and after the 1st day of July, 1875.

Mr. DAWES. I raise a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. DAWES. My point of order is that the amendment is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question was upon the amendment offered by Mr. BURCHARD, to strike out the fifth section of the bill; and being put, there were, on a division—ayes 71, noes 81.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES and Mr. BURCHARD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 95, noes 103.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. I rise to offer an amendment to the fifth section of the bill. I move to insert in the fourth line of the fifth section, after the word "enumerated," the words "except wool and woolen goods."

Mr. FIELD. That is an amendment against the farmers of the West, and we cannot vote for it.

Mr. KELLOGG. No sir; not at all.

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I offer the following amendment to come in at the close of the section:

That the first section of the act approved February 8, 1875, entitled "An act to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes," be amended by striking out of the proviso at the end of said section the words "on the value" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "on the quantity." And provided further, That said section shall not be so construed as to impose duties on bolting cloths, which are hereby restored to the free list.

Mr. DAWES. I raise the point of order that the amendment is not germane to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does it relate to any subject-matter affected by the 10 per cent. reduction?

Mr. DAWES. Not at all; it relates to the little tariff bill.

Mr. BECK. It relates to dutiable articles, not particularly enumerated in this section perhaps.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. EAMES. I move to add to section 5 these words:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to wools imported from foreign countries.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the sixth and last section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 6. That the increase of duties provided by this act shall not apply to any goods, wares, or merchandise actually on shipboard and bound to the United States on the 10th day of February, 1875, nor on any such goods, wares, or merchandise on deposit in warehouses or public stores at the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. FORT. I move to strike out the section which has just been read. I wish to say that by the provisions of that portion of the bill which have already been adopted we propose to tax whisky on hand, which I supported and still think was right. I can see no reason in the world why we should exempt from the increased taxation imposed by this bill goods that have not yet entered the ports of this country. Upon the same principle which we have adopted in reference to whisky, we should tax the goods that have been received into the country and remaining in store and not yet distributed. And in order to be consistent we should at least make the provisions of this act apply to goods not yet actually imported; but it is here proposed in this section to exempt goods and let them enter free of this increased taxation, all goods which have been shipped or are in store for shipment to this country.

I cannot understand the philosophy of the Committee on Ways and Means when they come in here and propose to tax whisky upon which a tax has already been levied and collected. The bill as it is provides that any persons who have been to Europe, to every foreign port on the globe, and purchased goods, may hereafter import them free of this increased tax. They say that they will not tax anything that has been purchased for the purpose of shipment to this country; and why not, I ask, if they are consistent? My friend by my side here says that whisky is the only exception. Where is the principle upon which that should be made an exception? If we tax whisky on hand, whisky in store, whisky that has already been taxed, we certainly ought to tax the goods which have not yet arrived in this country. Will not this merchandise be enhanced in value on arrival in our ports to the same extent and in the same proportion that whisky will be enhanced by this increased taxation?

Mr. DAWES. Whisky can bear almost any load.

Mr. FORT. Yes, I know that whisky can bear almost any load, and I am willing to go as far as the gentleman in taxing whisky. Tax it a dollar a gallon, tax the whisky on hand, and tax that which is yet to be made, if you please. So far as I am concerned individually, you may tax it out of existence. I do not use any of it myself as a beverage, nor do I use tobacco either. So you cannot frighten me individually. In my judgment, a dollar a gallon on whisky is about all you can collect; and I believe you ought not to raise the tax on tobacco at all. But, Mr. Chairman, I am speaking now with reference to the principle which the committee wish to apply by this bill. Why do they go away to all the ports in the world and exempt from additional taxation all the goods that may be imported into this country for the next six months, and by the same bill go to the extent of taxing another article which is now on hand here in the country, and which has already paid all the tax that was imposed by the law in force at the time it was manufactured? Can any of the gentlemen tell me?

When those goods arrive in this country, as I have already said, their value will be increased by reason of this increased taxation if that provision becomes a law, just as much as the value of any other goods, just as much as whisky is increased in value by this additional taxation; just as much as the value of the goods bought the next day afterward. If you have bought a cargo of goods which has been shipped to-day or placed on shipboard to be transported to this country, why should you be preferred to the merchant who buys his goods to-morrow and puts them on shipboard the next day? Can some gentleman tell us any good reason why this principle should be applied to imported merchandise when the directly opposite principle is applied to whisky and other articles manufactured in this country? If the committee will give any good and sufficient reason for this apparent inconsistency I will vote for this section of the bill. But I am opposed to any increase of the tariff; yet if we are to increase taxation I want it to begin at once as upon other articles. I want no favoritism, so I move that it be stricken out.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. I take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STORM.]

Mr. STORM. Mr. Chairman, I sought the floor some time ago in order to express my views upon this bill. I endeavored to express myself, and I think I did, decorously. But it seems that, notwithstanding my endeavors to be courteous to my colleagues, I brought down upon myself to a certain extent their combined wrath. Because I saw fit conscientiously and candidly to express my views upon this important question, my colleague [Mr. SPEER]—I will not say unkindly—sent up to the Clerk's desk and had read a few remarks which I made here three or four years ago upon another bill. I see nothing in those remarks now contradictory to my position to-day; nothing whatever. For if my colleagues will read those remarks they will find they were intended as an apology for just such conduct as we have witnessed here to-day on the part of some few Pennsylvania members. They always do some ridiculous things when the tariff is under discussion that need some apology.

I do not think it is necessary for me to get up here to-day and reply to anything which has been said, at least so far as my colleague now nearest me [Mr. SPEER] is concerned. Gentlemen will remember that a few days ago he got up here and confessed that he had some years since given a cowardly vote. Now, I never in my life gave a cowardly vote on this floor. Some years ago my colleague voted for the repeal of the franking privilege, a great and notorious abuse. For some reason or other he now advocates the restoration of the franking privilege, and confesses to the House that he was a coward in voting some three or four years ago for its repeal. Now, I have no such confession as that to make before this committee. I expressed my candid opinion upon this subject. My colleague would have you believe that this tariff is in the interest of the laboring classes of my district, in which my colleague at large [Mr. ALBRIGHT] happens to reside. I believed myself years ago that such was the operation of a tariff law. But I have since learned that the laboring men have only been made a pack-horse in Congress for the purpose of getting through protective tariffs for the benefit of a few manufacturers. My observation of the results of tariff legislation in Pennsylvania has been that it makes a few men rich at the expense of the laboring people. Go to those regions of Pennsylvania where the iron and coal interests flourish best, and you find a few men living in palaces; and at the same time thousands of laboring men are living in shanties and are starving.

It is a notorious fact that the iron manufacturers of Pennsylvania control to a great extent the coal interests of that State. They employ men during the summer season, but the moment cold weather sets in the iron manufacturers and the coal dealers, who entirely control these interests of Pennsylvania, combine to put down wages.

The result is that these men have their wages cut down to starvation point; they must either starve or strike. There are thirty thousand people to-day in the anthracite-coal regions of Pennsylvania out of employment and are suffering from hunger and cold, while these lordly manufacturers who have been benefited by high tariffs are living in luxury and faring sumptuously every day.

If I believed we could enact a tariff law the benefit of which would be shared by the laboring men, I would go as far as he who goes farthest and swiftest to help enact such a law. But it is a notorious fact that the laboring men have never reaped one dollar of benefit from a protective tariff. Our tariff laws have been passed only for the purpose of enriching a few men. That has been the entire result. There are thousands of men out of employment to-day, denied work by these coal and iron companies while they have coal piled up at the port of Elizabeth mountain high in order that they may advance the price of the same two dollars a ton. They first compel their men to strike as winter sets in, then raise the price of coal, and then have the meanness to throw the blame on the laboring man. To-day, when men ought to be employed—when these companies could afford to employ them—they are turned out in midwinter to starve. Yet those wealthy coal and iron men come here to-day and say they want a higher tariff passed for the benefit of laboring men! The laboring man never gets one dollar of benefit from these laws!

Mr. ALBRIGHT. The men that work in the coal mines get the highest rate of wages that the business justifies; and they refuse to work because they do not want employment at these rates, while many of the men at the factories, foundries, furnaces, rolling-mills, ore-beds, and so on, are idle, although they would be glad for employment at reduced wages.

Mr. STORM. It is a well known fact that the coal and iron companies always reduce wages just as cold weather sets in, putting them down to starvation point, and thus force the men to strike or work for nothing.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move to amend by adding to the last section the following:

Provided, That it shall be shown, by testimony under oath, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that such goods, wares, and merchandise were by contract sold to be delivered in future, at a fixed price, which contract was in writing prior to the 10th day of February, 1875.

Mr. Chairman, my object in offering this amendment is to carry out the views expressed by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. FORT,] who has but declared the conviction which I previously entertained, and in accordance with which I had already prepared an amendment. The design of the amendment is to make this section harmonious with the proviso in regard to whisky and tobacco. The bill as reported from the committee taxed all tobacco and whisky on hand. But when the committee saw the injustice which would thus be inflicted upon a very large class of persons who had made contracts for the future delivery of whisky or tobacco, they adopted a proviso in each case that the tax should not apply where by contract the tobacco or whisky was sold to be delivered in the future, the contract being made in writing at a specified price.

Now, why should not a provision of that kind be attached to this section, which exempts from the increased duty all goods on shipboard?

Mr. FORT. Not only that, but it covers all goods in warehouses; they may be all over Europe; no one can tell how many goods may be stored away there.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Under the operation of this section, unless some such proviso as that which I offer be adopted, the country will be flooded with goods that will escape this increased duty. My amendment is for the purpose of meeting such a case.

Mr. DAWES. As to those "warehouses all over Europe," I will let my friend from Illinois [Mr. FORT] take care of them. Now, I will say that there never was a tariff bill passed that did not contain a provision similar to that of this section. It generally has applied to all goods on shipboard at the time of the passage of the act; so that between the reporting of the bill and its passage there was an interval of which merchants availed themselves to hurry in goods for the purpose of escaping the increased duty. Hence the committee thought it best to limit the provision in this bill to all goods on shipboard when the bill was reported.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Why do you want to protect men who have bought goods in Europe and have them on shipboard, unless they have contracted to resell them at a certain price? Why should they not pay the increased tariff just as much as men having tobacco and whisky on hand should pay the increased tax? What is the reason for especially protecting them?

Mr. DAWES. Take the case of a man who bought his stock of whisky or his stock of tobacco before the tax is put on, to be delivered to some purchaser hereafter under a contract. Here is a man who buys in a foreign market and puts the ocean between him and the man he bought of, so he cannot take it back; and it does not apply to the man who sold it to be delivered in the future. He has got to take care of himself, and do the best he can with regard to changes in the tariff as all have to do in regard to the contingencies that happen to every one. But as regards the man who buys in a foreign market before ever you suggest an alteration in the duty, under the existing duty, and gets his goods on shipboard bound to the United States, or has brought them to the United States and put them into a warehouse in the United States and given a bond to pay the duty which the law then required, if you alter the law and make him pay more when he cannot restore his goods, you do him an injustice which we have provided against in the case of whisky and of tobacco; because we have provided that the man who has purchased to deliver in the future may deliver by paying the tax that was the law when he sold, but that the man who buys of him shall pay the additional tax.

Mr. BANNING. Do not you alter the law and make the distiller pay more for the whisky that is in the bonded warehouse than the bond called for?

Mr. DAWES. So far as whisky on hand is concerned, we do. There can be no question about it.

Mr. BANNING. And why should the importer be treated any better than the distiller?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Mr. KASSON. Are not two amendments now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending to strike out the section. And there is a motion to perfect the section which it is proposed to strike out. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] is in order.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I have but a word to say in relation to this peculiar legislation, and I wish I could make every republican, at least on this side of the House, understand what I say and appreciate some of these things as I see them. It is not because I am sectional or desire to make a personal attack on anybody.

Mr. SPEER. I ask the Chair to restore order, that we on this side of the House may hear what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I want the republicans to hear what I am saying without the democrats hearing it, because I do not want them to know what this bill does.

Mr. BANNING. We want information over here.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. And I do not want you to have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order before the gentleman from Illinois proceeds.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. It is to be expected that every industry to be taxed will of course resist the taxation. I do not propose to discuss the principles of this bill further than I have already discussed them. If it were proposed to tax the codfish of Massachusetts, the clams of Connecticut, or the oysters of Baltimore, there would be an outcry against it in those sections. But it would be just as easy for me to say, when you resist that, that a tax of that kind would be paid by the consumers in the West as for gentlemen representing New England to say that all the taxes on high-wines manufactured in the West are paid in the East.

Now I say, as I have said before, that the principle on which you base taxation should be general, universal, and just. And I say here, and to the republicans I especially appeal, you are preparing a tax bill which creates a discrimination against the West, and I characterize it as an injustice and an outrage. I do not care how much tax you put on, but I insist that it shall operate fairly. Now, the republicans on this side of the House are well aware that they have a law in many of the Western States, as the result of that sort of fanaticism which some people carry into legislation on the subject of whisky. This is a re-enactment by the Congress of the United States of a declaration that men who are engaged in this enterprise are outlaws and not entitled to be put on the same footing as others who are engaged in other pursuits.

Take the article of tobacco; it is an article of less use than the manufactured article of alcohol. It enters into no useful art. It is a nuisance everywhere, although I use it more myself than I do whisky, as do many others. But I insist that when you come to apply taxation you shall apply it equitably, so that the men who are engaged in this great industry shall not be declared outlaws and placed beyond the pale of reasonable legislation. By this bill you do that, and I for one protest against it; not because I desire to protect one industry against another; not because I desire to put one tax on or to take another tax off; but because I insist that this great industry to which this bill is so unjust shall be treated as an industry in the country entitled to just recognition at the hands of those who make the laws.

And let me say in conclusion that this article on which you discriminate 50 per cent. is manufactured in the West, enters into all the useful arts, is used in paints, in oils, in drug-stores, everywhere, while tobacco enters into no useful art; and I again protest against your treating those engaged in this industry as though they were outlaws and entitled to no consideration.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the committee only to a single observation, not upon the principles involved in this bill, for of them I have nothing more to say. I have no desire to discuss further the general policy of the bill. This proposition of the gentleman from Illinois applies, as it is claimed, the same principle to these importations as that applied to whisky and tobacco. I ask the attention of the committee in all candor to an error in this proposition. It is not the same as that applied to the tax on tobacco. That is to be applied only to future manufactures. We tax nothing that is now manufactured. Additional taxes are to be paid only upon the articles subsequently manufactured. So, too, in regard to distilled spirits. We do not levy the whole increase of the duty or tax on that which is on hand. On the contrary, you will remember that there is interest and insurance which increases the cost of the whisky on hand until it can find a market. In view of that fact the committee only put the duty on spirits on hand to half the amount of the increased tax, in order that a market might be had by the holders of whisky on hand before a new manufacture could be put in the market at the same price without the loss of interest and insurance; otherwise it would force a dead loss upon the holders of existing stocks.

Now, then, as to these articles to be imported the case is entirely different. There is an immense amount of these importations on hand and in transit to meet the coming spring trade. We therefore said that it was due to them so far as orders have been issued prior to the notice of the increase of duty that they should come in upon the basis of the existing law. Without this the ordered goods would be put in warehouse until present stock was exhausted, while home prices would be largely increased without this competition. To put the entire increase of duties upon those importations would violate every equitable provision of law as applied to whisky and tobacco, and would be extreme injustice to those who are engaged in the foreign trade and who must meet liabilities by prompt sales.

Mr. DAWES. At this hour it was arranged that other duties should occupy the attention of the House, and therefore I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the committee will not rise.

Mr. DAWES. I insist on my motion.

Mr. COBURN. Is the motion debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. No; it is not.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I would like to ask the Chair, if we rise now, when this bill will come up again?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill would come up again whenever the House goes into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union at the same stage in which it is now left.

The motion of Mr. DAWES was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 87, noes 60.

The committee accordingly rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HALE, of Maine, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration a bill (H. R. No. 4680) to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government, and had come to no resolution thereon.

GEORGE F. BROTT.

Mr. SHELDON, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 158) for the relief of George F. Brott; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE.

Mr. GIDDINGS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4819) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande River at or near Brownsville, Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF A REPORT.

Mr. LOWE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back a letter from the Secretary of the Interior to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in relation to Indian matters; which was recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. CRUTCHFIELD, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial from the National Grange, asking Congress to pass a bill in aid of the Texas Pacific Railroad Company to construct its road; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. LOWE, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Indian Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of Executive Document No. 91, being the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior for appropriations of $50,000 for the subsistence of the Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wicahitaw Indians, in the Indian Territory; and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. RAINEY, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, in regard to the Texas Pacific Railroad; which were referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 51) in relation to civil-service examinations.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 1222) to authorize the trustees of the Free Young Men's Benevolent Association to sell and convey square numbered 272, in the city of Washington.

The message further announced that the Senate had insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the bill (H. R. No. 376) to provide for the incorporation and regulation of railroad companies in the Territories of the United States, and granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. STEWART, Mr. HOWE, and Mr. HAGER.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported adversely upon the following; which were laid on the table, and the reports accompanying the same ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 543) to reimburse Charles Daugherty for his expenses to the consulate of Londonderry; and

The petition of Mrs. Melinda Leipsker, of the city of New York, widow of Joseph Leipsker, for redress for the wrongs sustained at the hands of the authorities of Peru, and claiming the restoration of her late husband's property, &c.

MARCUS RADICH.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I am also instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report a joint resolution referring the claim of Marcus Radich to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which objections will be in order.

The preamble to the resolution states that Marcus Radich, a subject of Turkey, claims to have been domiciled in the State of Texas in 1865 and to have been the owner of one hundred and sixty reams of writing paper, which he alleges was taken from him during that year by the civil and military authorities of the United States in the State of Texas.

The joint resolution gives the said Marcus Radich leave to file his claim in the Court of Claims, and vests that court with jurisdiction to hear and determine the validity of the said claim and to render judgment thereon for such amount as may be found to be due; provided that said Radich shall have the right to appeal from the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman say that this has been considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. It has been, and I have been instructed to report it.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Both parties should have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I suggest to the gentleman to change it so that either party can appeal.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Certainly; I modify the joint resolution accordingly.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 159) was received, read three times, and passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAJOR J. W. NICHOLS.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Some time since the Committee on Military Affairs reported favorably Senate bill No 769, for the relief of Major J. W. Nichols, paymaster of the United States Army, and which was referred to the Committee of the Whole and placed on the Private Calendar. I now ask that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be passed.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill provides that there shall be paid to Major J. W. Nichols, paymaster of the United States Army, the sum of $4,500 erroneously charged to and paid by him in the settlement of his accounts.

No objection was made, and the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, from the Committee on War Claims, by unanimous consent, submitted adverse reports in the following cases; and they were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2492) for the relief of Thomas Plant;

A bill (H. R. No. 3954) for the relief of Messrs. J. W. and C. Rowland, of Norfolk, Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4376) for the relief of Jacob Kaufmann, of Hardin County, Kentucky, for goods taken and destroyed during the late war by Federal soldiers;

A bill (H. R. No. 3953) for the relief of George C. Wedderburn, of Richmond, Virginia; and

The petition of Harper P. Hunt, of Vicksburg, Mississippi, for payment of rent of house in Vicksburg.

A bill (H. R. No. 4146) providing for the exclusion of Chinese from the benefits of the naturalization laws of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 4512) for the relief of Henry P. Ryder, late consul at Chemnitz; and

The petition of Mary Louise Perrin and Trautmann Perrin, for compensation for destruction of their property by the bombardment of Greytown, Central America.

WISCONSIN CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. ORR, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported as a substitute for House bill 4716 a bill (H. R. No. 4820) authorizing the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company to straighten the line of their road; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommended to the Committee on Public Lands, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

DEATH OF HON. JOHN B. RICE.

The SPEAKER. The hour of three o'clock having arrived, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I arise to pay a last tribute of respect to the memory of my late colleague, Hon. JOHN B. RICE. He died at the house of his daughter, in Norfolk, Virginia, on the 17th day of December, 1874. He left at the close of the last session with his health somewhat impaired. During the recess of Congress he sought rest at resorts, and at times he improved so that he and his friends hoped and believed he would soon be fully restored. But this was not to be so, and he did not take his seat at the commencement of the present session, and gradually failing, died as I have stated.

But recently he whom we now mourn was among us in robust health, giving promise of many years of usefulness. His great heart has ceased to beat, and he sleeps the sleep that knows no waking.

We stand above his honored grave and recall the graces and grand qualities of his life.

A good man has gone to rest and the world is poorer for his loss, though richer and better because he once lived.

To those who knew him as he was known here, no word of mine can add anything to the incense which envelops his memory or increase the respect which in life his high character challenged from all who came in contact with him.

Without pretension, he was industrious, earnest, and able; without obstinacy, he was firm; without self-righteousness, he was scrupulously honest and conscientious in all things; faithful to his friends, yet just to his opponents; true to his convictions, yet ever ready to receive suggestions and advice. Scorning deceit, he diligently sought for truth; fearless in action and in the expression of his own opinions, yet attentive and respectful to those with whom he differed; public spirited as a citizen, charitable to the needy, sympathetic with the suffering. A gentle, loving, and indulgent father, genial as an associate, he was a man to be honored and loved as he was in life, and sincerely mourned as he is in death.

His early life was not spent under the most auspicious circumstances, and his eminence in his profession, in the social world, and in politics was achieved by his own strong will and sturdy efforts.

JOHN BLAKE RICE was born in the village of Easton, Talbot County, Maryland, in 1809. His father was a shoemaker, and he learned that trade. It is not known how long he worked at this humble calling, nor is it certain that he might not have continued at it many years longer and the whole current of his life have run in a different channel but for an accidental circumstance something in this wise: The manager of a Baltimore theater, while strolling along one of the streets of the Maryland metropolis one day, overheard a rich musical voice troling out a song inside a shop. He stopped and listened for a moment and then passed on, but the voice impressed him as unusually fine, and he made it convenient soon after to drop in at that shop and find out the possessor of the fine baritone. After a brief negotiation, the young mechanic was engaged as a chorister in Clemens's Theater, and it was there the stage life of JOHN B. RICE began. This was in 1833. The following year found him a member of the company of the Walnut Street Theater, Philadelphia, where he was engaged for "singing parts," and occasionally was on for a song between acts. While in Philadelphia he married Miss Mary Ann Warren, daughter of the old manager and actor, William Warren, long since deceased. Miss Warren was then playing soubrette parts at the Walnut Street Theater. Mr. RICE subsequently went to Albany, New York, where he opened the National Amphitheater. That undertaking, however, proved a failure, and he became associated with the proprietor of the Albany Museum. He remained there four or five years as manager, and thence went to Buffalo, where he joined the company of the Eagle Street Theater. He became manager. It was at the Eagle Street Theater in Buffalo, and under Mr. RICE's management, that Dan Marble made his first great hit as a comedian; and it was also here that Charlotte Cushman, then a young lady of twenty-one or twenty-two, played one of her very first star engagements. The Eagle street enterprise succeeded but moderately in a financial way, and the manager concluded to give it up and go west.

Early in 1847 he went to Milwaukee and there managed a theater for a time. He ascertained that a canal convention—that was an age of canals—was to be held at Chicago in July of that year, 1847. It occurred to Manager RICE to seize the occasion and turn it to account, and with such capital and credit as he could command he went to Chicago and put up a wooden theater on Randolph street, between Dearborn and State streets. He had calculated rightly; the canal convention brought a large number of strangers to the city, and the theater made money rapidly until it burned down.

The first "star" introduced to the Chicago public under his management was Edwin Forrest, who appeared as Jack Cade, June 15, 1847.

Two months after the destruction of the wooden theater on Randolph street Mr. RICE purchased a lot on Dearborn street, the present site of Rice's Block, and in the month following (September 16) the foundation for a new theater was laid. It was opened February 3, 1851. This theater was prosperous, and in the subsequent years "stars" of the first magnitude played within its walls. Charlotte Cushman was the most prominent.

In February, 1857, Mr. RICE, having accumulated considerable wealth, decided to retire from the business. His management practically ended November 27, 1857, when the season closed. He determined to utilize his property by turning it into business places. This was done, and was occupied as stores and offices until 1871, when it was destroyed in the great fire. A substantial structure was erected on the site the following year, and is known as "Rice's Block," a monument of his enterprise and faith in the future of his loved city.

After abandoning the theater Mr. RICE devoted himself to the improvement of his real estate, of which he had acquired considerable. During all the time he managed a stage there was never allowed anything which would tinge the cheek of the most refined with a blush.

Although a prominent and active citizen almost from the day of his arrival in Chicago, and a warm republican from the day of the organization of that party, Mr. RICE took no great part in political life until 1865, when he was nominated as the candidate of the "Union party" for mayor, and elected by a large majority. In 1867 he was renominated by acclamation, and again elected by a large majority. When his term of office expired in the fall of 1869, he refused to be a candidate for re-election. His two administrations were singularly fortunate. There were no jobs in the council and no complaints of indifference on the part of the mayor. As presiding officer of the council he was in all respects the best that body has ever had. He took an active part in every detail of the city affairs and was thoroughly conversant with all its necessities.

From 1869 to 1872 he took no active part in politics; but in the fall of the latter year, when the republicans of the new first congressional district wanted a candidate, he was unanimously selected as the representative of his party. He was chosen by an immense majority, swollen by his own personal strength, and went to Washington to discharge his new duties, bearing with him the same conscientious determination to fulfill the high functions of his office that he had displayed in other and less important positions. His record in Congress is well known. A new member, busied in learning details, he had few opportunities of displaying the real ability which was in him; but when he spoke and acted, it was always wisely and well. By his associates he was loved and respected.

By his death, which occurred in almost the prime of his life, the first congressional district has lost its first Representative, the city and county one of its best citizens, and his family a kind and affectionate father.

Mr. RICE's family consisted of one son and five daughters. His son enlisted early in the war, and was killed at Chickamauga, Tennessee, September 19, 1863, while in command of Company A of the Eighty-ninth Illinois Volunteers. His daughters all are living; and they, and his wife, who also survives him, mourn him as only such can mourn for such a husband and father.

In the city where he lived, and over which he had so long, so acceptably, and so justly ruled, and where he was so well and widely known, he was most appreciated and loved. The announcement of his death carried sorrow to every household there; few men ever had or ever will win as he had won the hearts of all—the high and low, the rich and poor alike of that city. And we shall be fortunate indeed if when our work is done it has been as good and our lives as pure as that of him of whom we take the last good-by to-day.

I submit the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep regret of the death of Hon. JOHN B. RICE, a member of this House from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That, as a testimony of respect to his memory, the officers and members of this House will wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk to the family of the deceased.

Mr. CORWIN. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the eloquent remarks of my colleague [Mr. WARD] I do not rise to pronounce a formal eulogy upon the late JOHN B. RICE, but simply to add my tribute of respect to the memory of one who was my esteemed friend.

Although I had on one or two occasions prior to the assembling of this Congress met Hon. JOHN B. RICE, my acquaintance with him only commenced when we met in this Hall in December, 1873. In the selection of seats at the commencement of this Congress it so happened that we were placed at adjoining desks, and continued to occupy contiguous seats during the long, protracted session of seven months. Sitting side by side and representing districts almost adjoining in the same State very naturally led to frequent conversations and an interchange of opinions upon the various questions that came before the House. As our acquaintance improved this interchange of thought and opinion became more and more frank and unreserved, until, long before the close of the session, our conversations were characterized by the fullest confidence and all the freedom of warm friendship. It was in this unreserved intercourse, in the expression of his matured opinions as well as in his impromptu suggestions, I had the amplest opportunities to discover the more striking characteristics of the deceased, and learned to respect his many noble qualities both of mind and heart.

As we have been informed by the gentleman who preceded me, Mr. RICE, with but limited advantages for the acquisition of an education and contending with the embarrassments of poverty, commenced the stern battle of life, but with his vigorous intellect, his strong will, his unswerving honesty and integrity and his generous heart, he fought the battle bravely and successfully. And while he secured a competency as to fortune, he also secured that which was of far more value, the esteem and confidence of all with whom he was brought in contact; and on many occasions he received the strongest evidence of the high estimation in which he was held by his fellow-citizens, by being intrusted by their suffrages with high and important public duties.

As a man, Mr. RICE was distinguished for a strong, comprehensive, and vigorous intellect, quickened and trained by a long and active participation in the stirring scenes of active business, in which he acquired a large fund of practical and varied information. In manners he was affable, social, courteous, and dignified; in conversation, entertaining and instructive; and in all the relations of life, generous and magnanimous.

As a Representative in this Hall, where you all knew him, I need say but little of my late colleague. In the discharge of his public duties, the first and paramount question with him was, what is right? and when he had settled that question, he firmly adhered to his convictions, permitting no considerations of policy or expediency to swerve him from the right. He was unremitting in his attention to the business and wants of his constituents, prompt in his attendance upon and indefatigable in the performance of his duties in committee, regular and constant in his attendance upon the sessions of the House, and ever devoted himself industriously and conscientiously to the discharge of his whole duty to his constituents and to the country. He did discharge his duties nobly, faithfully, and well, and filled to the full the Jeffersonian standard of qualifications for public service. He was immovably honest, he was thoroughly capable, and he was diligently faithful. In a word, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, what I have said, that in his private as well as in his public life he was eminently distinguished for his immovable, unyielding, unflinching honesty and integrity. He earned and was justly entitled to that highest reward of the faithful public officer, "Well done, good and faithful servant." "Peace to his ashes."

Mr. FORT. Mr. Speaker, it was painful duty on a former occasion to announce to this House that death had been among the delegation from Illinois and had stricken down Hon. JOHN B. RICE, Representative from the first district; and it is with tender sadness that I break silence here to-day to record my humble tribute of respect to the memory of my departed colleague.

I had known him before, but had formed no intimate acquaintance with him until our service began here together at the opening of this Congress. Our acquaintance soon became very agreeable to me. I soon discovered in him noble qualities and boundless generosity; I soon found that he was not only approachable but genial. It seemed to me that his manner and his bearing were not merely acquired, but that they sprang from native politeness and were founded upon broad benevolence and good-will toward all mankind. About him I never discovered anything low or vulgar; but to me his conversation always appeared elevating and his purposes honorable. To him I was indebted for information to me valuable, and which I still cherish with his memory.

The influence of his society was refining, and his companionship profitable. He desired that all mankind should be free and happy. He would always rather please than affront. Nature as well as culture had endowed and formed and fitted him to entertain his fellows. His service here was not all his public life. With other theaters he was more familiar where he merited and received the popular favor. He was a loved and cherished companion, and a dear and indulgent father. He blessed his home and his fireside. The blow that removed him thence crushed and stunned the family circle.

When first we met here he seemed the most robust of all the delegation from our State. His sturdy and rugged form appeared able to wrestle with the labors and exposures of life for many years to come, and little did we think that he would be the first of us from Illinois to fall.

In his service here he worked hard and incessantly, and it is more than probable that his close application to his public duties during the long session, and his deep anxiety that all matters with which his country was concerned should go well, so wore upon him and sapped away his strength as to cause his premature end.

He loved his country more than he loved himself. He was true to the party with which he acted. All his political action was governed by principle, born of sincere conviction of what to him seemed right. For his political adversary he had no words of abuse. To his opponents he accorded the same freedom of opinion he claimed for himself, and to them he was always temperate and respectful. Like his great political leader, of whom he was a devoted follower, he had "charity for all and malice toward none."

But, Mr. Speaker, it is with no vain hope that I could fitly pronounce his eulogy that I do speak. I can at best but recognize the solemnity of the hour.

Death has been busy with us here on this floor. To his dread call no dilatory motions avail. There is no postponement to another day. The hammer falls and the victim is down forever. One after another our fellows fall around us and we inquire one of another, who will be the next? But this no one can tell. One by one our comrades are called; and they depart at once for that other country, and we seem to hear their spirits say, "Be ye also ready."

It is fitting, Mr. Speaker, that we should thus pause and hush the hum of our busy sessions and recognize the presence of death, that stalks unseen among us and treads unheard upon this floor. Unbidden and unwelcome have been its visits.

We shall never see the portly, manly form of my colleague stride up and down these aisles again; we shall hear the silvery tones of his commanding voice no more. When he fell some of us were appointed to attend his remains to the tomb. We followed them to his home in Chicago, of which city he had long been a resident and had been its chief magistrate. There the citizens, both prominent and humble, and there his friends and neighbors gathered sorrowfully around his bier to pay their last tribute—there to gaze for the last time upon that form once so full of life and action; but it was cold and motionless. His once familiar voice, which had so often swayed them and moved them to applause, was silenced forever; his eye that had so often beamed upon them was rayless and closed. And as they gazed there started many a tear from eyes unused to weep. Sadly we bore his remains to the grave in Rose Hill Cemetery, near his resident city, and silently and softly we laid them down to sleep until the morning of the resurrection, and peace be to his ashes was our prayer.

Our colleague has gone, gone on to that other city over on that beautiful shore.

Hail, brother; hail and farewell.

The resolutions offered by Mr. WARD, of Illinois, were then adopted unanimously.

DEATH OF HON. ALVAH CROCKER.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to interrupt the ordinary current of business in this House that the attention of its members may be directed for a few moments to an event full of admonition and one which awaits us all. It becomes my painful duty to announce to the House the death of one of its members, Hon. ALVAH CROCKER, a Representative from the tenth congressional district of Massachusetts, who died at his home in Fitchburgh, in that State, after a brief illness, on Saturday, the 26th day of December last. He separated from his colleagues and associates here at the commencement of the holiday recess in unusual health and spirits, speaking frequently of a vigor and freedom from illness not enjoyed for many years. His journey northward to his home in the rigor of December brought upon him a severe cold and afterward congestion of the lungs, which confined him to his house on Friday and terminated fatally on Saturday evening. He sank rapidly in the last few hours of his illness, and passed quietly away at eleven o'clock in the hope of a glorious immortality.

Mr. CROCKER was born in Leominster, in our State, on the 14th day of October, 1801, and had therefore at the time of his death just entered the seventy-fourth year of his age. His parents were poor, and without the means of rendering him any assistance in preparation for after life, and hardly more than a maintenance from his earliest years, and he became a factory operative when only eight years of age. The first and almost the only fifty dollars expended on his education was earned by him in night work in the factory at four cents an hour, and while it lasted he was a pupil at Groton Academy. Whatever he could earn in this way was devoted by him to fitting himself for a broad and practical usefulness in after life. In fact, almost his entire education was acquired in that broader field of practical life where necessity is the teacher and experience the guide.

In his early manhood he entered as a partner with others into a responsible business connection as a manufacturer of paper, in which pursuit he continued with marked and unbroken success till his death. Though largely and devotedly engaged in this the special calling of his life, he found time to undertake and carry out to successful results other enterprises, some of them of vast public concern, and all of them of great usefulness and influence in promoting the healthy and permanent growth of the community in which he lived, bringing to himself at the same time large returns and ultimately great wealth.

Embarking with characteristic zeal and energy in the earliest railroad enterprise in Northern Massachusetts, if not himself its projector, at a time when railroads were as yet an untested experiment, he lived to see that line traverse the entire State and connect its tide-waters with the Hudson and the western lakes by one of the most marvelous works of internal improvements in modern times, and all pushed to completion by an energy and forecast inspired by him more than by any other. Under the same influences his own town has grown from an unimportant village of a few hundred inhabitants to a flourishing and prosperous city of large and increasing wealth and importance in the Commonwealth. It to-day mourns the loss of a citizen constantly contributing by a ceaseless activity singularly well directed to its improvement and prosperity, to the comfort and character and growth of its people.

Nor were these characteristics of Mr. CROCKER's life confined in their results to the city of his residence, but were felt in stimulating the development of a great variety of industrial interests and the consequent increase of prosperity and wealth in other parts of the State. A beautiful manufacturing town has sprung up within a few years on the banks of the Connecticut, increasing rapidly in population and wealth, and destined soon to rank among our cities, which owes its very existence to the indomitable energy and tireless efforts of Mr. CROCKER.

The implicit confidence of his fellow-citizens in his spotless integrity as well as sound judgment and unusual forecast called him most frequently to positions of very delicate trust and of great responsibility, which he held from his earliest manhood to the day of his death. His decease has made vacant positions in the board of direction of institutions and associations for purposes of business and public and private trusts as well as for objects of benevolent and religious work greater in number and importance than would be caused by the death of almost any other citizen of the Commonwealth.

Mr. CROCKER was three times a member of the house and twice a senator in the Massachusetts Legislature. On the 2d day of January, 1872, he was elected to the Forty-second Congress to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of Governor Washburn. His election took place while he was absent from the country with Mrs. Crocker, whose failing health had taken him abroad many months previous to the existence of the vacancy. He had no knowledge of either nomination or election till his return after both had occurred. Mrs. Crocker's protracted sickness and death detained him for some time from his seat. He was re-elected to the Forty-third Congress by a large majority, but declined a re-election to the Forty-fourth.

Mr. CROCKER was in politics a whig, and after that party a republican. Bringing to the discharge of every political duty growing out of those relations the same enthusiastic zeal which characterized his every undertaking, he was nevertheless no partisan, and always followed his convictions rather than his party. He came into Congress late in life, and was not permitted to remain long enough in his work here to leave that personal and permanent impression upon the administrative policy or legislation of the country which experience often brings to the share of others. But he was not idle here. Indeed, he could not be idle anywhere. In the committee-room, as well as upon the floor of the House, and always in consultation, his practical knowledge and wise counsel were invaluable, while his genial disposition and flow of conversation made him a general favorite. It was truthfully said of him that "he went directly at a thing in Congress as he would in his own business affairs, and in an earnest, homely way they were little accustomed to witness."

Mr. CROCKER was a remarkable man in all the variety of pursuits in life into which his tireless spirit and iron will led him to embark. A larger measure of success and a more wide-spread influence and abiding impression were attendant upon his career in life than mark the path of most of his contemporaries. The tendency of his whole life work was for good. He was a generous giver and especially delighted in aiding young men of limited means. The needy never turned empty from his door. No portion of that vast concourse of people who crowded the funeral procession testified their bereavement more sincerely than the humble and dependent who had been recipients of his bounty. He was a religious man, and died in the faith of the Protestant Episcopal Church, of which he was an officer at the time of his death.

Mr. CROCKER had been married three times, and left two children and a widow stricken by this bereavement, yet sustained by that faith which assures them that their loss is his gain.

Mr. Speaker, the shafts are falling thick and fast among us. Massachusetts is called upon by this dispensation, for the third time during this Congress, to mourn the loss of one from the number of those she has commissioned for the public service in these Halls. And even now, before these ceremonies are concluded, a fourth is added to the list of her dead. The funeral procession has but just borne another of her delegation from the scenes of his labor here. Our Commonwealth is most sensible of how great is that loss. She bows her head in submission and testifies her grief at the tomb of her faithful public servants.

I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep regret the death of Hon. ALVAH CROCKER, late a member of this House from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a testimony of respect to the memory of the deceased the officers and members of this House will wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk to the family of the deceased.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the most gracious boon conferred by a merciful Providence upon any man is that he may not know the hour or manner of his death. When it comes to him in the full vigor of activity, especially after long, long years of a well-spent life, as a relief from all sorrow and care, with a humble Christian hope of a future and better life to come, such a departure calls neither for tears nor mourning in his behalf whose life has been so blessed by its ending. Yet it is well to pause amid the contests of life, its struggles and business, to give thought to the conduct and example of the departed, to contemplate all that is beautiful and good in his character, and to pay some tribute to his virtues, and thus aid to keep green his memory.

By the death of ALVAH CROCKER, a member from Massachusetts in this House of Representatives, our Commonwealth has been called a second time to mourn for one of her chosen men; and while he had not, from long services in the councils of the nation, high attributes of eloquence and learning, attained that exalted place in the affection and reverence of his countrymen that was held by the great statesman of our State whose death has within a twelvemonth called for our deepest sorrow, yet in another and perhaps no less useful sphere Mr. CROCKER has so well performed his part in life, and has left for the contemplation and imitation of the youth of the country a career no less honorable, and in its results to mankind quite as practical and beneficent.

From humble life, without the advantages of that early training and cultivation which the universities may give, brought up by the rugged hand of poverty, he early distinguished himself as a thorough man of affairs, whose foresight in planning, whose skill and energy in executing many most important undertakings for the welfare of his fellow-citizens and the prosperity of his State early gave him an enviable reputation in a community where all the faculties of mind were taxed to the utmost in the most active and complicated duties of life.

Mr. CROCKER's character and success in life were indeed the very outgrowth of the industrial pursuits of the people of Massachusetts. At an almost infantile age an operative in a manufacturing establishment, thence steadily rising step by step, overseer, superintendent, owner, acquitting himself so well in all that each step was but the round of the ladder by which he climbed from honorable penury to competence and the like honorable wealth. Among the very first of the far-seeing men of his State, with business sagacity that never faltered, he foresaw the effect which the then young system of railroading must have upon the prosperity of his native State, and allied himself very early in one of the most considerable railroad enterprises by which Boston was ultimately to be connected with the western part of New England, the provinces, the Canadas, and the great lakes. His sagacity and business qualities were at once recognized by his associates in the enterprise, so that he was early made president of the Fitchburgh Railroad, planned in the beginning to connect his native town and the town of his adoption with Boston, but afterward to be extended so as to become a portion of the railroad system that connects the tide-waters of Boston Harbor with the great lakes and the granaries of the West.

Mr. CROCKER early saw, almost as by intuition, what came to others only by slow teachings of experience, the impossibility of profitably and effectively carrying on very extensive mercantile traffic over railroads encumbered by curves and heavy gradients, and therefore nearly a quarter of a century ago became the ardent advocate and untiring promoter of the most splendid engineering achievement of the age, the opening of a railroad track through Hoosac Mountain by a tunnel sufficient for a double-track road of quite five miles in extent, of which work the State gave him charge as its commissioner, and which he lived only long enough to see completed.

While possessing qualities of the most positive character, yet his nature was so kindly, his disposition so courteous, his mind so fair, and his conscience so just, that he had fewer collisions in the many and diverse kinds of business in which he took most active part than fall to the lot of the most favored few. With such attributes, sustained by the most sturdy and vigorous physical health, which enabled him to carry forward with the greatest vigor all that he undertook, it was not singular that he early commanded the attention of his fellow-citizens as one well fitted for public service, and was by them chosen to represent their interests in public affairs; so that nearly forty years ago he was elected the representative of what is now the city of Fitchburgh to the Legislature of Massachusetts, which he filled during several terms, and was afterward later in life elected to the senate of the State for two successive periods; in all which service he gained an enviable distinction and influence, never failing to command the suffrages of his fellow-citizens where he was offered as a candidate for their votes; so that he was elected twice to his seat in this House in the Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses, in which last we now turn aside from public affairs to mourn his loss as a fellow-member but yesterday acting with us in the business of the hour.

An ardent, patriotic friend of the Union, on the breaking out of the war Mr. CROCKER took the most active and intense interest in all measures for the suppression of the rebellion. Too far advanced in years to take part in arms, he exerted himself to send forward troops, and while the war was raging he made a voyage to England and spent very considerable time in impressing upon the manufacturers of England the condition of our country and the necessity that there should be a community of interest and thought and mutual fellowship between those classes in both countries that represent the industries of the people. When the war was over, not unmindful of those who had gone forth at his solicitation to battle for the country and laid down their lives in its service on the battle-field, he exerted himself with his accustomed power and vigor, contributing thereto largely of his own means to provide that the fallen heroes of his city should have one of the most elaborate and costly of the many monuments erected to the memory of those who fell in battle in that war, and fortunately lived long enough to see it completed, having made the address at its dedication but a few months before his decease.

ALVAH CROCKER died at the age of upward of seventy-three years, but was possessed of such a strong and powerful frame and constitution of body, that it seemed probable but for the accidental contracting of the disease from which he died, he might have seen many more years of useful service to his country and his kind.

Such is the faint outline of the record of a life not so brilliant indeed as some that flash their light across the age in which they live, but so useful, so practical, so devoted to everything that could aid, prosper, and foster all the best interests of the community in which he lived, that it is more than doubted whether any better model of a life well spent and duty well done can be held up for the closest imitation of those who may come after him.

The resolutions submitted by Mr. DAWES were then unanimously adopted.

DEATH OF HON. SAMUEL F. HERSEY.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, we are but five in all in this House from the State of Maine when all are present, and one of our number has been taken away by death. HON. SAMUEL FREEMAN HERSEY, who represented the fourth district of Maine in this Congress, died at his home in Bangor on the 3d day of this month. The fatal disease that at last ended in death fastened upon him many months ago and broke down the physical strength which had been marked in his previous life. It interfered seriously with his duties in the last session of this Congress, driving him from the Capitol in the late winter months after he had resolutely fought its approaches, turned his home during the summer and fall into a house of sickness, and inexorably forbade any attempt to share in the labors and duties of the present session. The resolute will of my late colleague and friend was so noticeable a feature in his character that I shall be well borne out by those who knew him best in saying that nothing less than the painful disease under which he suffered could have kept him away from the post to which a trusting people had called him. As I remember him and recall an acquaintance of many years, there arises before me no instance when he shrank from a duty laid upon him.

General HERSEY was born in Sumner, in the county of Oxford, and State of Maine, on the 22d of April, 1812. He came from revolutionary stock, his maternal grandfather having been an officer in the war for Independence; and he was reared in that best school for early boyhood which the New England fireside, hillside, and school-house furnish. When at the age of twenty-one he entered upon mercantile business for himself; he had secured the good education that the district school and the county academy afforded, and was wellfitted to enter into the conflict of active life. In business he almost always prospered, increasing his ventures and his gains from year to year, and latterly extending his operations into Minnesota, Wisconsin, and other northwestern States. He was prompt and energetic in affairs; honest and conscientious in his dealings; and as his fortune increased gave liberally of his store.

He was always trusted by the people among whom he lived, representing the town of Milford in the lower house of the Maine Legislature in 1842; the city of Bangor, to which he afterward removed, in one branch or the other of the State Legislature in 1857, 1865, 1867, and 1869; besides serving for some years as a member of the executive council. After filling other important State offices, he was first elected to this House in September, 1872, and was re-elected in 1874. From participation in what promised to be the stirring scenes of the Forty-fourth Congress, he has been cut off. Had he lived, his position must always have been clearly defined. His was never a halting or doubtful course. His religious and political beliefs were a part of his life; and he accepted the consequences of those beliefs boldly.

This positiveness of character led him not to fear antagonism; but his kindness of heart raised up friends and prevented life-long enmities.

Mr. Speaker, our deceased colleague will be greatly missed in our own State, where he has been for years a prominent citizen; to his neighbors and friends the loss will come nearer; to his family it can never be repaired. On this floor those who knew him during the brief weeks that he was in attendance know that this House has lost an honest, useful member.

But awful as is the coming of death, and sobering as must be its contemplation, the way along which a human life is sometimes led to it is so beset with suffering and agony that to our limited vision the final summons must then seem more like a relief than a doom.

General HERSEY's disease was severe and protracted. It never broke down his mind or his spirit, but it wasted his body and racked him with pain such as few men fortunately are ever called to endure. It was incurable; and at last he sank under it. But he died in his own house, with his wife and children about him, and loving hands smoothed his winter shroud. Thinking of how vexed had been his last days and how peaceful was his death, who will not ask with Spenser—

Is not short pain well borne that brings long ease
And lays the soul to rest in quiet grave?
Sleep after toil, port after stormy seas,
Peace after war, death after life doth sometimes greatly please.

Mr. Speaker, I move the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep regret the death of HON. SAMUEL F. HERSEY, a member of this House from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That as a testimonial of respect to the memory of the deceased the officers and members of this House will wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk to the family of the deceased.

Mr. FRYE. The ordinary labors of this legislative Hall are suspended, its confusion hushed, and a new spirit holds supremacy here now. A remarkable event induces silence and solemnity, admonishing us that—

Art is long and time is fleeting,
And our hearts, though stout and brave,
Still like muffled drums are beating
Funeral marches to the grave—admonishes us that life is uncertain and death certain; admonishes us that what we have to do we ought to do quickly and well.

Sir, death is making a terrible havoc in our ranks. Within less than one year six members of the New England delegation in Congress have died, each one of whom in his chosen business or walk in life was a pre-eminently successful man. Statesmanship, law, commerce, and manufactures have made monumental contributions to the city of the dead. To-day the death of three of them has been announced on this floor; two, men full of years and full of honors, each of whom had reached nearly if not quite that allotment to man's life of three-score years and ten; each of them like a ripe shock of corn gathered to his fathers, leaving a legacy behind him of a well-rounded and perfect life.

Our colleague, General HERSEY, was cut down in the very prime and vigor of life. To the casual observer his work, though well done, was only half done; his life a partial failure, his battle not fought out, and the broken shaft would be a fitting monument to his memory, the emblem of life incomplete. But to us who knew him well and for years have known him well he had finished his fight and won the victory, he had run the race and reached the goal. Were we to build his monument, its base would be broad, strong, deep laid, where no frost could heave and no tempest move; and its shaft should be beautiful, white, perfect.

To his business career General HERSEY brought earnestness of purpose, strict integrity, economy, habits of industry, and an indomitable will. His hope was so bright and buoyant that no defeat ever made him despondent; his courage was so strong and sure that no lion in his path ever turned him aside; his integrity so strict and steadfast that no shadow of suspicion ever darkened his fair name. I remember, when he with others was surety on a defaulting State treasurer's bonds, he interposed no legal technicality, not even an equitable defense, but promptly paid every dollar not only that the law could demand, but all a quickened and sensitive conscience could suggest. Such was his sagacity that his plans never miscarried.

The city he lived in and his State poured wealth into his coffers; and, as my colleague has well said, the States of the great West, too, were compelled to contribute, until when he died he was one of the wealthiest, if not the wealthiest, man in Maine. Then, sir, as a business man stainless, owing no man, neither defrauding nor dealing hardly with any man; indulging in no rash and reckless speculations; prosperous, successful in every endeavor; rich beyond his most ardent hopes—do I not say well, his life was complete?

But, sir, could I say nothing more than this it would seem to me but the cold praise exacted by strict justice. My heart would give no response. My affection pay no tribute. A man's life lived for self alone is a failure. General HERSEY lived another, a higher, a purer, a nobler life than this of amassing wealth. The stream which turns the wheel of the mill and drives the spindle and the loom does its duty; but never this alone. All along its course, from its source to its mouth, it continually makes green the grass, waters the flowers, gives life to the tree. So General HERSEY all through his long, active, business career never for one moment when overtaking and passing by his less fortunate fellow-man forgot him, but stretched out to him a helping hand, gave him words of good cheer. And I know of many a man to-day in my own State and some here, living now in comfort, who owe all that they have to his kind words and liberal deeds.

For his bounty
There was no winter in't; an autumn 'twas,
That grew the more by reaping.

In social life General HERSEY was the gayest among the gay, his presence always joyfully received, and his absence always felt with grief. To the poor, the feeble, and the dependent his face always brought with it healing, strength, and hope. His hearty, cheerful manner was like the sunbeam breaking through the prison bars, making for the whiles the gloom of the cell brightness.

The cause of education lost one of its best and most beneficent friends when he died. Institutions of learning in my own State and in others to-day mourn for the loss of a liberal, bountiful benefactor. In politics he was always welcome to the party whose policy he espoused, for he was one of the most zealous, earnest men I ever saw, giving new strength and courage to his party.

His people loved him; and there never was an office in their gift he could not command; yet his modesty led him to accept but few. The devotion of his constituents was well illustrated in the fact, as my colleague has stated, that here in this House for this term of Congress he has been nearly the whole time unable to perform any of the ordinary duties of a member, yet before the last election, though most understood or feared at least that he was upon his dying bed, he was renominated by acclamation and re-elected by an increased majority.

It may be and it may seem to many gentlemen a little thing, but I cannot help mentioning it in filling out this life of my colleague, that if you walked with him through the streets of his native city you would see little children greeting him and he them all along your way.

Sir, I tell you the man who loves children and whom children love is not and cannot be a bad man. The children of his Sunday-school, to whom he had again and again given words of wisdom and counsel, met the other day in his native city and passed resolutions indicative of sorrows at their irreparable loss.

The Church mourns General HERSEY as one of its pillars broken. His memory will be fresh and green always. He was no sectarian; he was no bigot; but he loved with his whole heart the church of his choice. I remember Webster once said "religion is a necessary and indispensable element in any great human character." My late colleague was a religious man. His religion can be summed up in two commandments, "To love God and to love one's neighbor." We who knew him knew that he could pray; for—

He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small;
For the dear God who loveth us
He made and loveth all.

Sir, did I not say well, then, that his life was well rounded and perfect too?

Our sympathies, sir, go out to his bereaved family. They have suffered a loss for which now they can see no compensation whatever. To the widow and to the fatherless children we can only say, "Death is the crown of such a life."

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker: In the winter of 1854, at Augusta, the capital of Maine, I formed the acquaintance of the late SAMUEL F. HERSEY. He was at that time in the full strength of middle life, and was among the foremost of the leading business men of Eastern Maine. That rank he held till continued ill-health, commencing soon after his election to this Congress, compelled his retirement.

Mr. HERSEY had his birth at Sumner, in the county of Oxford, in 1812. At his majority, or soon after, he sought his home and theater of labor in the city of Bangor, the then central point of the large lumbering interests of Maine. At this period in the history of the State, his adopted home was especially noted for the enterprise and ability of its professional and business men. Its prosperity and promise had drawn to it from the neighboring counties, and indeed from the neighboring States, not a few men who since then have honored the State in every department of life. This comparatively new city at that time welcomed every bold comer. Mr. HERSEY, at the very start of his business life, was as bold in purpose as in form were the hills of his native county. He entered the race to reach the goal. Success in honorable business was the end he sought. That end he attained by wise foresight, just means, unflagging endeavor, and unimpeachable character.

His large acquisitions, the manner, time, and place of his investments, attest a superior order of judgment. The steady increase in the rewards to his industry indicate the possession of a mind which could and did grasp all the conditions of success. His eminent prosperity was not a result of chance. He had it because he deserved it; because his plans and courses of action by an inevitable law gave it to him.

As time passed and his means increased, his operations were largely diversified. He was a merchant, banker, and lumberman. He invested in timber lands, both East and West, in mining, insurance, banking, and railroads. Maine has not alone witnessed his achievements. In 1854 he commenced the purchase of timber lands in Minnesota and Wisconsin, and with others erected a mill for the manufacture of lumber at Stillwater, in the State of Minnesota. Since that time he has had large interests at that point and elsewhere in the State. His money has aided in the construction of at least two of the railroads in our State. He owned at the time of his death not less than seventy-five thousand acres of timber lands in Minnesota and Wisconsin, and no inconsiderable amount in Michigan and Maine.

Minnesota, therefore, Mr. Speaker, unites with Maine in expressions of profound sorrow at the death of a citizen so eminently deserving the honors conferred upon him in his native State and the respect paid him wherever known. As sincere mourners dwell on the banks of the Saint Croix and the Mississippi as of the Penobscot. So large were his investments in the State and so early did he participate in her development that we almost deemed him an addition to our own delegation to this House. While he had his home in the East, he was deeply in love with the West. He appreciated the extent and character of her needs and her capacities. He fully realized her immense possibilities, and was ready to favor measures which, to the more conservative, seemed little less than visionary.

Mr. HERSEY was thrice married. Four sons were the fruit of the second marriage. Two of these sons are residents of Maine and two of Minnesota.

Prior to 1854 the deceased was a member of the democratic party. Up to that year he followed the fortunes of this party with the same enthusiasm and devotion with which he afterward, and till his death, sustained those of the republican. He was five times a member of the Maine house of representatives and twice a member of the executive council. In addition to other honors, he was elected to this and the Forty-fourth Congress. In politics, he was sincere and earnest. His convictions found expression in bold and straight-forward action. His position on pending questions was never left to conjecture. He was sufficiently radical to be secure against the temptations of a timid and therefore dangerous conservatism. His patriotism was too ardent to lend its ear to the voice of mere policy. He was a most valuable member of the republican party, for he was in it from conviction and was unswerving and unceasing in labor and counsel to keep alive that aggressive spirit which leads to party achievement. He did not falter, though others fell behind.

Among innumerable false, unmoved,
Unshaken, unswerving, unterrified,
His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal;
Nor number, or example with him wrought,
To swerve from truth or change his constant mind,
Though single.

Mr. HERSEY was not well known to the members of this House. He came here a sick man and therefore was not himself. His sickness affected his mind and spirit as well as body. When in health his mind was intensely active and his spirits always buoyant. He was happy in every place and amid all labors; he was free and genial; his manners made him friends, and his open kindness gave him influence.

His donations to institutions of learning and to churches were very considerable. Many a locality will long cherish his memory. His accumulations of wealth did not make him deaf to the calls of the poor or forgetful of the teachings of religion. Our friend died at home. Death approached him in slow, yet certain steps. He saw the enemy at a distance and watched his advance. He had months in which to review life's work and bring to his lips, "Thy will be done." His faith in the world's Redeemer took away every fear of the grave. He had wrought life's work with a fervent heart; his duties had been well performed and his days well spent.

O, what a glory doth this world put on
For him who, with fervent heart, goes forth
Under the bright and glorious sky, and looks
On duties well performed, and days well spent!
For him the wind, ay, and the yellow leaves,
Shall have a voice and give him eloquent teachings.
He shall so hear the solemn hymn, that Death
Has lifted up for all, that he shall go
To his long resting-place without a tear.

The question was taken on the resolutions, and they were unanimously agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. SAMUEL HOOPER.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. In the death of SAMUEL HOOPER, the last of our associates who has been summoned from the scenes of his earthly labors, we have been called to part with a member of this body one of the oldest of our number, one of the longest in continuous service, and one of the most generally esteemed and respected.

He was born in Marblehead, on the 3d of February, 1808. His father and grandfather were merchants, and he came of that sturdy race of men who for two centuries have peopled the shores of Massachusetts Bay, making it the nursery of seamen, the home of ship-masters, and the birthplace of so large a proportion of those whose enterprise and sagacity have whitened every sea with the sails of American commerce; the men of courage, endurance, clear heads, and large hearts, who have gathered wealth in every field of commercial adventure to pour it out freely in response to any call of patriotism, of public spirit, of religion, education, learning, or public or private charity.

His father was the president of the old Marblehead Bank, one of the solid moneyed institutions of an elder generation. He was thus by birth and training fitted for the employment to which most of his life was devoted, that of a merchant and financier, in which he achieved such eminent distinction and success. In his early life he went as supercargo in his father's vessels to Cuba and Russia and Spain. He married a daughter of William Sturgis, and thereupon became a partner in the house of Bryant & Sturgis, and engaged in the trade with China and the northwest coast. On the dissolution of that firm he became a partner of William Appleton, his predecessor in Congress, continuing the large and varied business of the house, after the death of Mr. Appleton, under the name of Samuel Hooper & Co. By inheritance and marriage he had a considerable property, which he increased to the dimensions of a large fortune.

His wife, two daughters, and several grandchildren survive him, but he had borne the heavy sorrow of the loss of his only son.

His public life consisted of three years' service in the Massachusetts house of representatives, a single term in the State senate, and the fourteen years in which he has represented one of the Boston districts in Congress.

Mr. HOOPER first attracted notice in connection with public affairs by the vigor with which, when a member of the whig party, he addressed himself to the defense of the doctrine of hard money and the stringent regulation of whatever substitute therefor might be devised, which brought him for a time somewhat in affiliation with the democrats. He became early a member of the republican party, and during his whole term of service in Congress represented that party upon this floor.

To most of those of us who are members of Congress for the first time Mr. HOOPER's position and strength in this House are very much matters of tradition. But with his large experience, with his native shrewdness, with his clearness of mind and uprightness of purpose, he brought to the public service here when he first entered upon it qualities of conspicuous value. As a member of the Committee on Ways and Means and as a member and chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency he has exerted a most important influence upon the legislation of the country.

He was the trusted adviser and friend of Chase and Fessenden and BOUTWELL. He was a friend and confidant of Stanton and Sumner and Lincoln. And, Mr. Speaker, I may say that his friendships and his valuable influence extended far beyond the region of his party associations. He was a friendly man; he was a thoughtful and considerate man.

He could clearly perceive and could clearly express what he thought. He had none of the graces of oratory, but in the time of his strength he was combative, forcible, energetic in the maintenance of the views which he believed sound.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is as we remember him so recently among us rather than as the man of business or the politician that I desire to speak of him to-day. His modest and simple nature would have shrunk from anything like public eulogy; but his affectionate heart would have rejoiced in everything that spoke of kind and friendly remembrance. I think that we all of us have felt as we have looked upon that silvered head that whoever else might bear the title by courtesy, Mr. HOOPER after all must be considered as the father of this House.

Possessed of large wealth which enabled him to gratify his friendly tastes, he was the most hospitable of men; hospitable not only in the sense in which many who are men of wealth may exhibit that quality, by costly and frequent entertainments, but by a hospitality and flowing courtesy toward all men. He attracted to his house and to his society men among the ablest and the best which our country furnishes, and with them men of less note and even sometimes men whom it would require a large charity to reckon of that number.

He had firm convictions; he adhered to his own opinions. But he had no animosity, and his willingness to receive and treat with fairness the differing opinions of others had nothing in it of the condescension of toleration. He recognized human differences, and he had a large catholic spirit which could embrace relations with men of all classes of opinion. Men of fame, men distinguished in science and in letters, have been his friends and associates. And he extended to the poor and the lowly a free and generous liberality which should bring a benediction upon his memory.

When the ear heard him, then it blessed him; and when the eye saw him, it gave witness to him because he delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him.

His private charities were limited only by his knowledge of the wants of those about him. And in addition to those which he bestowed, and so quietly that except by comparison of the knowledge accidentally obtained, one person with another, few could have any idea of their extent, he employed an almoner to seek out cases of want, whose distribution to the poor of this city has reached to thousands of dollars. He was liberal to public objects, and founded a school of mines in Harvard College with an ample endowment.

I think, Mr. Speaker, he has left in this House no enemies; all of us who knew him were his friends. He has gone from us; and we turn to our public duties more sadly because we miss him from among us.

It has been touching to note during the present session what a change gradually came over him, with his failing strength and increasing years. Formerly taking his full part in social intercourse, exhibiting a ready and genial humor, a promptness to argue any proposition, I noticed that during this session he became gradually more silent, his conversation partaking more and more of reminiscences, and that he became what in the clamor for a hearing so often prevailing in this assembly we have all learned to value, a good listener. He will be long affectionately remembered by those of us who have known him; and he deserves to be honorably remembered for his great public service. His family—wife, children, grandchildren—were all in a foreign land at the time of his death. But there were affectionate and tender friends and relatives about his dying bed; and those who followed him to the grave felt that their presence recognized not only a public loss, but a deep and general private sorrow.

Mr. Speaker, I submit the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep regret the announcement of the death of SAMUEL HOOPER, late a member of this House from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a testimony of respect for the memory of the deceased, the members and officers of the House wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, As a further mark of respect, that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to second the resolutions which have just been offered, and to add a few words to what has been said so well by my distinguished colleague [Mr. E. R. HOAR] who preceded me.

Representing in part upon this floor the city of Boston, I regard it to be my duty, as it is my desire, to give expression to the sense of the loss which she has sustained by the death of Mr. HOOPER, who for fourteen years was her faithful and trusted Representative. A son of Massachusetts, Boston had been his home for nearly fifty years, and he was thoroughly identified with her people and her interests. He contributed his full share toward the development of her resources and the promotion of her prosperity and growth. As her Representative in Congress he sought and succeeded in winning for her the good opinion of his associates from other parts of the country, and did much, I think, to dissipate the prejudices which unhappily too often prevail among our people and color their action.

Few men in public life can point to a longer or more honorable service than fell to the lot of Mr. HOOPER.

In the State Legislature he was distinguished for his independence and for the progressive measures he espoused, which were much in advance of the sentiment of the party to which he belonged. His seven terms in Congress covered the most eventful period of our history as a nation. During that time a social and political revolution was accomplished, all the powers conferred upon Congress by the Constitution were brought into exercise, and measures affecting the most precious rights of individuals and States were daily pressed for action. In the determination of these questions Mr. HOOPER acted worthily and ably. The possession of wealth enabled him to extend to others a generous hospitality, and he could count among his friends the most distinguished citizens of our own and foreign countries. From this wide and liberal association he derived a store of varied knowledge of affairs that became of inestimable value in the discharge of his duties in this House, upon which his associates could always depend and from which they freely drew. His judgment had been strengthened and enlightened by long attention to important questions affecting the State and free intercourse with those who made them a study. We can all join, sir, in recalling his familiarity with questions of finance and commerce, and the readiness with which he imparted information concerning them.

Mr. HOOPER closed his career as a legislator in the ripeness of age. Declining to engage anew in the cares and labors of congressional life, he passed away when those cares and labors were for him shading unto their end. The records of this House attest his usefulness, but by none but those who personally knew him can his generosity and kindness be properly appreciated.

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Speaker, there is no time when it is so difficult to find language to express the real emotions of the heart as on an occasion like this. This is due in part doubtless to the confused and stricken condition of the mind which naturally follows the death of one whom we have been accustomed to honor and esteem. The sad reflections which overshadow us are not relieved by the utterance of any words, however fitly chosen. Reverential silence seems to be more appropriate.

I cannot speak of Mr. HOOPER as those who have preceded me; it was not my fortune to know him so long and so intimately as they knew him. My acquaintance with him commenced with the assembling of the Thirty-ninth Congress, in December, 1865. Before I had the honor of meeting him here I had learned to regard him as one of the most esteemed and trusted members of this House, who had entered Congress during the eventful period of the war, and whose opinions had deservedly great weight with those who were charged with the administration of the Government. A brief acquaintance with him served to confirm those very favorable impressions which I had already received as to his great worth as a man and his fidelity as a public officer.

Two years later, on the organization of this House in the Fortieth Congress, I became a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, of which Mr. HOOPER was then, as he had previously been, one of the leading members. That brought me into more intimate relationship with him than I had previously enjoyed. My two years' service with him on that committee gave me many opportunities to witness something of his daily life and to judge of the ability and fidelity which he brought with him to the discharge of his public duties.

It was not to be expected that I would always agree with him in measures of public policy. We approached questions here very frequently from different stand-points, and represented constituencies often not in accord in their theories of government. I trust, however, I am none the less able on this account to do ample justice to his character.

While faithful to what he considered the peculiar interests of those he represented, I never found him apparently governed by any narrow or sectional views. Impressing me from the first as a just, discreet, and fair-minded man of broad and liberal sentiments, I came soon to regard him as a model representative of that class of solid and progressive men to which he pre-eminently belonged. So I have continued to regard him.

Kind, genial, benevolent, faithful, industrious, and vigilant, he pursued the right as it was given him to see it with unfaltering steps and unruffled temper. The petty storms which occasionally sweep over this House burst harmlessly over his head without disturbing that quiet dignity of deportment which always attended him as a member of this body.

While true to his friendships and earnest in his convictions he carried with him that conciliatory disposition which disarmed all personal antagonism, and if he had a personal enemy among all the members of this House I am quite unaware of it.

It was my good fortune, Mr. Speaker, to have received at the hands of Mr. HOOPER many attentions and courtesies, which have made a lasting impression upon me and which I shall always kindly remember. Indeed, such were the kindly personal relations existing between us for several years past, that I have been accustomed to regard myself as one of his personal friends, and as such I have reason to believe he regarded me. I unite therefore with affectionate earnestness in doing every suitable honor to his memory.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, all that the usage or custom of the House of Representatives requires upon such a solemn occasion as this has been done, and well done; and perhaps it were best that here these funeral ceremonies should close. But to me this occasion is not one of mere ceremony. Almost a quarter of a century ago I was drawn into the closest relations with Mr. HOOPER in the representative assembly of our Commonwealth; and from that hour he has been to me a friend so faithful, so just, so wise, and so true that I cannot let this last hour of mournful farewell to pass without bearing testimony to those great, noble, and generous qualities of mind and heart which distinguished him quite beyond any man I ever knew. I need not—indeed, I cannot—add a word of eulogium. It is not my purpose to eulogize my deceased friend and fellow-member, with whom I have served here for eight years in closest harmony and closest friendship. I pray your pardon, Mr. Speaker, and that of the House, in thus possibly contrary to usage giving my heartfelt testimony to the kindest heart and the noblest mind in all the relations of life, that filled with all the best attributes of social intercourse, and which overflowed with charity to all men and the truest loyalty to friendship.

The resolutions submitted by Mr. E. R. HOAR were then adopted unanimously; and in accordance therewith (at five o'clock p.m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report a bill (S. No. 1339) to abolish the consulate at Amoor River, and establish a consulate at Vladivostock, Russia, and for other purposes; and I ask its immediate consideration, if there is no objection. It is very short. It will not occupy five minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no use for the Senator to try to pass it now, several of us meaning to stand by the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1152) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the Grand Chain, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PEASE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Dialogue & Wood, ship-builders, of Camden, New Jersey, praying payment for materials furnished and labor performed by them in the construction of the United States Coast Survey steamer Hassler, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. That D. F. Murphy is hereby continued as Official Reporter from the expiration of his present contract for reporting the proceedings and debates of the Senate until the further order of the Senate, subject to all the duties and obligations of said contract and to the supervision and control of the Committee on Printing on behalf of the Senate in all the respects therein provided, and to receive payment for such service according to law.

This continues the existing contract with the Reporter, which I believe has given satisfaction to the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. That is right.

Mr. ANTHONY. It continues it until it may be the pleasure of the Senate to change it.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to nem. con.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 769) for the relief of Major J. W. Nichols, paymaster of the United States Army.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the resolution of the House for the printing of the report of R. W. Raymond on mining statistics, with accompanying engravings, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM G. DONNAN of Iowa, Mr. A. M. WADDELL of North Carolina, and Mr. CHARLES CLAYTON of California managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 159) referring the claim of Marcus Radich to the Court of Claims; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1210.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1210) to provide for the distribution of the regular official editions of certain public documents and of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, this is a bill which was presented at the last session of Congress, but it was complicated with the franking privilege and various other questions, and we withdrew it or allowed it to drop. We have eliminated from the bill everything that was objected to, I believe, and have prepared a new plan for the distribution of documents that are already required by law to be printed. There is no new printing ordered in this bill, but there is considerable cutting down from the printing that is now ordered to be made by law or by regulation; and in the process of years there has come to be a great deal of abuse, extravagance, and waste in the distribution of our regular reports and documents, and this bill is intended to remedy that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There are amendments reported by the Committee on Printing which have not yet been read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether this bill increases the number of regular documents to be distributed?

Mr. ANTHONY. It does not. There may be in some few cases a few additional copies; for instance, we give to the judges of the Supreme Court certain documents, and some copies to the reporters of the RECORD; but it is in the aggregate a considerable reduction.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator whether the bill provides anything as to the publication of duplicate documents ordered by the Senate and House; whether it guards against the publication of duplicates of the same document when ordered by the House and Senate?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is no additional guard put in beyond what there is already. Duplicate documents are not printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. They were formerly. The House and Senate sometimes printed the same document.

Mr. ANTHONY. That was when the printing was done by contract and each House had its own printer, or each House had the same printer, but he charged for printing two documents when he printed only one. Since we have had the printing done at the Congressional Printing Office, we do not duplicate documents.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know it was formerly the case that we got two copies of the Patent Office report, one printed for the House and one for the Senate. Many volumes have accumulated to me since I have been a member of Congress, and they are so numerous that I do not know where to put them or what to do with them. There are many documents of no earthly value whatever. I am willing to trust the Senator from Rhode Island in this matter; but if he would stop the duplication of documents and make it unlawful, I would be very glad.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like for information on this point to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to what I know was the fact in reference to documents ordered by both the Senate and the House, so far as furnishing the committee-rooms with copies was concerned. So late as 1873, when the report of the committee on the condition of the late insurrectionary States was printed, that being a joint committee, two copies of that report in thirteen volumes were furnished each committee-room, one printed and bound by the Senate and the other by the House. Unless there has been legislation which has prevented such a state of things as that since 1872 or 1873, it is something that ought to be guarded against, for I know that now in the committee-rooms duplicate copies of such reports are furnished.

Mr. ANTHONY. That was a joint committee and the committee reported in each House. If the committee had reported only in one House there would have been but one copy printed, and at any rate the type was only set once. It was merely a duplicate distribution to the committee-rooms, which ought not to have been, but being an exceptional report, it did not attract the attention of those who had charge of the matter, I suppose.

Mr. SHERMAN. The President often sends to each House of Congress at the same time certain documents and each House orders the printing, and I am quite sure, unless it has been changed in the last few years, we get copies of the same document printed by each House.

Mr. ANTHONY. The type is only set once.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that; but what is the use of duplicating copies? What is the use of loading down our shelves with duplicate copies of the same document, one printed by the Senate and the other by the House?

Mr. ANTHONY. If that is done, it is only accidental. This bill does not touch that abuse at all; it neither sanctions it nor remedies it; but we can very easily prevent that by an order of the committee. It does not require any legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest to the Senator that as we know that has been done, it ought to be prevented by this bill by inserting a provision that where a document is ordered to be printed by both Houses it shall only be distributed as a document of the House which first orders the printing, so that we shall not have duplicate copies. Some provision of that kind should be made to save expense.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection to that. But under this bill the distribution of the entire set of reserved documents to each committee-room is abolished. A considerable number are to be placed in the Senate Library, and the idea is that each committee shall have such reports and documents as it may require and there will be enough for each member of the committee, and then they will all bear the mark of the Senate Library upon them and there will be somebody to take charge of that. Now they are lumbering up the shelves of the committee-rooms and nine-tenths of them are of a character which the committees do not require. If the Senator from Ohio will reduce his amendment to writing, I will accept it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing will be read.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was in section 3, making a distribution of reports of the Supreme Court, to strike out in line 11 "six" and insert "twenty" before "copies;" and after the word "copies" to strike out "four of which shall be for the law library;" so as to read:

To the Library of Congress twenty copies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the same section line 25, to strike out "Department of the Interior" and insert "Library of Congress;" so as to read:

The remainder shall be deposited in the Library of Congress to supply deficiencies and officers newly created.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 7, line 6, to insert the words "committee-rooms of the;" so as to read:

Sec. 7. That it shall be the duty of the Congressional Printer to print and bind fifty sets of the Congressional Record for each session of Congress for the use of the Library of the Senate, from which the committee-rooms of the Senate shall be supplied; one hundred sets for the use of the Library of the House of Representatives, from which the committee-rooms of the House shall be supplied.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the same section, line 12, to strike out "ten" and insert "sixty;" and after the word "Congress," in the same line, to insert "ten sets of which shall be for the Library and fifty sets shall be for exchange with foreign governments under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library;" so as to read:

And one set for each official reporter of the House of Representatives; and sixty sets for the Library of Congress, ten sets of which shall be for the Library and fifty sets shall be for exchange with foreign governments under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

That when a document is ordered to be printed by each House of Congress separately, the copy printed for the House first ordering it shall be distributed, and no duplicate shall be distributed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

PATENT OFFICE GAZETTE.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1297.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1297) to provide for the republication of the first volume of the Patent-Office Gazette was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ANTHONY. The first volume of the Official Gazette of the Patent Office is out of print. There is constant demand for it for sale and for the use of the Government, and the Commissioner desires to reprint the first volume, the plates of which are already in our possession, and it will be merely the cost of the letter-press, which is small, and will be nearly paid for by the sale according to law. It is not for distribution at all.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF MAJOR POWELL'S EXPEDITION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to take up the resolution to print the report of Major Powell in quarto form. I believe the Senator from California who objected to it before is satisfied that it is correct.

Mr. SARGENT. I withdraw the objection I made.

Mr. SHERMAN. How many volumes will this work consist of?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know. The original proposition to print the report did not come from the Committee on Printing; it was ordered by law. This resolution is merely as to the form in which it shall be printed. I think the printing was ordered in some of the bills that the Appropriation Committee had charge of. It is not printed for Congress and it is not distributed by members of Congress.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the Congressional Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print the report of Major Powell's expedition in quarto form.

The resolution was concurred in.

MORSE MEMORIAL ADDRESSES.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution of the House of Representatives to print five thousand copies of the memorial services on the occasion of the death of the late Professor Samuel F. B. Morse.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed five thousand copies of the memorial services which were held in the House of Representatives April 16, 1872, in commemoration and honor of the late Samuel F. B. Morse, thirty-five hundred of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and fifteen hundred for the use of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to amend by reducing the total number to thirty-five hundred, and strike out "and fifteen hundred for the use of the Senate." I do not understand that the Senate desires this document. The resolution was passed by the House a great while ago, and the members of the House are very anxious to have it passed. The Senator from Ohio, I believe, objected, but it has been represented to me that the Senator is very sorry for what he did, and in fact has been troubled with remorse of conscience ever since. It is partly to oblige him that I bring it up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I beg leave to correct that impression. I simply said that if the committee would strike out those copies for distribution by the Senate I had no disposition to refuse the House the courtesy of printing any document they want for themselves. I do not believe in it, and shall vote against it; but I said on the appeal made by a member of the House that I would not stand in the way of there being a reasonable number printed for the use of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was concurred in.

THE COAST SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution to print the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, but an objection was made by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL,] who is now absent in the service of the Senate engaged in an important conference committee, and therefore I give notice that when he returns I shall claim of him the courtesy of giving me out of his time the opportunity to bring this matter up, which I lay aside on his account now.

AGRICULTURAL REPORTS FOR 1872 AND 1873.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, the Senate proceeded to consider the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1872 two hundred and thirty thousand copies, of which fifty thousand shall be for the use of the Senate and one hundred and eighty thousand for the use of the House of Representatives; and that there be printed of the report of the said Commissioner for the year 1873 one hundred and fifty-five thousand copies, of which thirty-five thousand copies shall be for the use of the Senate and one hundred and twenty thousand copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing have reported this resolution without recommendation. There has been a great difference of opinion in the Senate whether we should print this document or not, and the committee submit the question to the Senate. There is no mode of distributing it through the mails except by paying the postage.

Mr. SARGENT. I suppose that this document is very much desired by a large and useful class of the community, but at the same time there is no economy in the repeal of the franking privilege, as it was called, provided this great amount of printing is to go on in all directions. The only possible chance of making any saving is by restricting the printing; and all the showing that there has been in favor of the Government up to this time from the passage of the law imposing postage upon public Departments and members of Congress has been incidentally in this way; that is to say, that we have been able to reduce the amount of printing at the Government Printing Office. I think it is demonstrated that with the additional cost of clerks to lick stamps, with the additional cost caused by the printing of stamps, and the extra amount of clerks employed to keep the accounts, and in a variety of other contingent expenses arising out of the necessity of stamping documents in the Departments, there has been scarcely any direct saving by the abolishment of the franking privilege. Pretty much the only gain is the $100 or $200 for each Senator and member which we have been compelled to pay out of our own pockets to send documents to our constituents and to keep up correspondence upon their affairs. I do not complain of that, because I have very cheerfully borne it up to this time, and am disposed to do so hereafter; but if I and others situated in the same way are to suffer this inconvenience and this loss, I desire that the Government shall gain something by it; that the Treasury shall gain something by it. The only gain has been by reducing the amount of printing at the public printing office.

Now, this resolution raises the question very fairly indeed. It proposes a most enormous amount of printing, of a valuable public document I admit, but nevertheless a most enormous amount of printing. If we pass this resolution in this form, and authorize these hundreds of thousands of volumes to be printed for this object, I do not see how we can strike down the amount of printing for surveys of the public lands, how we can strike down the amount for Mr. Raymond's mining statistics or books in reference to commercial relations or the foreign relations of the United States—books which are valuable to other classes of the community than the farmers; and if we cannot, we are launched upon the tide which brings back the old amount of printing; and all the benefits derived from the abolition of the franking privilege pass away.

I for one cannot assent to this indirect reversal of the policy of Congress in abolishing the franking privilege. I am not in favor of repealing the law which abolished the franking privilege, at any rate at present. I should like to see it tried through a couple of Congresses and see what the effect is; but we do not give it its full effect if, leaving the law as it is, we order this enormous amount of printing.

Mr. THURMAN. I am opposed to reviving the franking privilege; not that I ever considered it my privilege; I considered it a burden on me; I considered it the privilege of the people. I voted, however, to abolish it, and I shall vote against restoring it, simply for the reason that I had seen it so much abused and the prevention of the abuse seemed so nearly impossible that it was better to have no franking privilege at all. If members of the Senate and the House had confined themselves strictly to the law, and never used or permitted their names to be used in franking matter that was not embraced within the law, that law would have remained on the statute-book to-day. But I saw with my own eyes—and I make no charge against any political party, for I have no doubt abuses existed in both—I saw the corridors and committee rooms of this Capitol filled with clerks writing the names of members of Congress who were many hundreds of miles away, franking matter not one word of which was entitled to be franked under the law, and sending off many tons of such matter all over the country; and I resolved from that moment that, come what would, I never would agree to the existence of the franking privilege; and therefore at the first opportunity I got I voted to abolish it, and I shall steadily for one oppose its restoration.

But, Mr. President, when that law was abolished it was supposed that the printing of public documents for distribution would either cease or at least that a distribution of them by members of Congress would cease, and that if they were to be printed for distribution some general law would provide how they might be obtained by the people, to whom application for them should be made, and the terms upon which they should be printed. My colleague has again and again called the attention of the Senate to the law of Great Britain upon this subject, and advocated something of that kind as the law of this country; and I must say for one that I am so far a convert to the proposition he made that I do insist that if we are to go on printing public documents for distribution, some general law shall be provided by which the people may know to whom to apply for them, and by which the proper Department that distributes them may furnish them at a cost that shall be provided by law. As it is now we have neither franking privilege nor such a distribution as we ought to have. Members of Congress have the burden of applications for documents just as they formerly had, while we have not the power to send them which we formerly had at the expense of the country.

Under these circumstances, I had hoped that there would be no resolution proposing the printing of any large number of any document until some law was devised which should provide for their distribution. The idea of my colleague was that these documents should be distributed by some proper Department to any person who would send to that Department the cost of the document and the cost of transportation. That is the English rule, as I understand, and I do not know that any better rule than that could be adopted here.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the rule that we reported in a bill at the last session of Congress, but it met so much opposition that we were obliged to withdraw it. Now I agree with the Senator from Ohio in regard to the franking privilege. I voted for its abolition, and I should not vote for its restoration because I believe the people do not demand it now, whatever may be their opinion by and by. But I think it should be said in justice that while the Senator saw in the corridors large stacks of political documents, of partisan documents for distribution, they belonged to all the parties—

Mr. THURMAN. I have already said that I was making no charge against any one party. If the Senator wants me to be more definite, I will say that as his party had about $100 to our one, or perhaps a thousand to our one, they abused the privilege a great deal more than we did.

Mr. ANTHONY. The proportion which the Senator states would apply better perhaps as to those who read than to those who have money to spend. [Laughter.] We undoubtedly address a much larger constituency who read public documents than the Senator's party does.

Mr. THURMAN. That hardly accounts for the perversion of public sentiment.

Mr. ANTHONY. While I agree in much that has been said about the abuses of the franking privilege, I believe that one of the most legitimate uses that ever was made of it was when from this Capitol on the eve of a presidential election the parties which appealed to the country asking for the suffrages of the people sent out from here the statement of the grounds upon which they asked for them, their own defense and their complaint against the other party. Every party had a committee-room; every party had a clerk of some committee, and the documents were sent through the mails alike by all parties and distributed information, giving to every voter the statements upon which the different parties relied when it claimed his vote. It was not, I apprehend, any violation of the franking law. The writing of the name was in violation of the law; but the Senator had a right to send a newspaper or his speech through the mail under his frank. It was a violation of the regulations of the Department and a violation of law for any other man to use a member's name or frank; but certainly the Senator had a right to put his name on his speech or on any other man's speech or on any document within a certain weight. That was perfectly legitimate under the old franking law.

Mr. THURMAN. Allow me to interrupt my friend. He never was more mistaken in the world than he is about what the old franking law was. It allowed us to send any matter that was printed by order of Congress or either House thereof. It permitted us to send any speech delivered in Congress. It permitted us to send up to two ounces any letter matter. That was what it permitted us to do; but it did not permit us to frank anything else; and therefore these mere partisan documents, compilations from newspapers and the like, things that never were ordered to be printed by Congress, speeches that never were delivered in Congress, did not come within that provision unless the matter was within the limit of letter postage.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not like to dispute with the Senator upon a question of law, although I have been told that the opinion of a lawyer is never of much value unless it is backed by a fee, [Laughter,] which I am sure it is not in this case; but I believe that we had a right to send through the mails anything whatever under two ounces.

Mr. THURMAN. That only shows how erroneous the Senator is this morning. The opinion of a lawyer is best when he has no fee to bias it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Well I have no fee in this case. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope—

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to cut off the Senator from New Jersey if he is about to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the call.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I only want to say one word. I hope that this resolution will pass, and I want to give my reasons briefly. The work has been done; the printing is stereotyped; the work contains valuable information which the people of this country want. We do very little for the agricultural interest of the country; spend less money for them than we do for any other class of society; and the members of the Senate and the House of Representatives will be glad to pay the expense of circulating this report. It is very true, as the two Senators from Ohio suggest, that we ought to have some better system, that we ought perhaps to adopt the English system or something as a substitute for the abolition of the franking privilege; but inasmuch as these reports are ready, as the people want them, as members of the Senate and the House of Representatives are willing to distribute them, I think that we ought to be permitted to have them struck off and given to the people.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to offer an amendment that it may be pending when this question comes up again. I move to strike out in line 5 all after the word "copies" down to and including the word "Representatives," and to insert at the end of the resolution:

Or so much of each as in the judgment of the Joint Committee on Public Printing will be likely to be required by those who are willing to pay the cost of the same and postage thereon.

Then it will authorize the whole amount to be printed or so many as in the judgment of the Joint Committee on Public Printing will be required by those who are willing to pay for them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order. I have not charge of the bill, but I think we ought to go on with the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour has expired. The unfinished business of Saturday is before the Senate, being the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I rise to a privileged question. I wish to make a personal explanation as my legal capacity has been impugned by the Senator from Ohio, and to state that I have examined the statute and I find that we had a right to send anything under two ounces and any public document of any weight whatever.

Mr. THURMAN. It is correspondence under two ounces, if the Senator will look at it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The language is "letter or packet."

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President—

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to a privileged question. I offer the following resolution:

Whereas, the birthday of George Washington having been declared by law to be a national holiday: Therefore,

Resolved, That as a mark of our veneration for his memory and our gratitude for his eminent public service, the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield for that purpose?

Mr. WINDOM. I do not.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. After line 209, in the appropriation for the Apaches of Arizona and New Mexico, I move to insert:

And only in proportion to the number so located on the reservation and refraining from hostilities as compared with the whole number of said tribe.

So that the proviso will read:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be expended only in behalf of those Indians who go and remain upon said reservations and refrain from hostilities, and only in proportion to the number so located, &c.

Mr. WINDOM. I make no resistance to that amendment, and hope the vote may be taken.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I move on line 1707 to strike out "fifteen" before "thousand" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to read:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Nevada, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $35,000.

Mr. WINDOM. A single word in explanation of that amendment. The Department estimated for $50,000. This is $15,000 less. The committee did not increase it, as requested by the Department, because of the misapprehension they had that the Senators from Nevada thought the increase was not desirable. They now seem to think it is; and as they are far below the estimates, I make no opposition to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOGY. On page 72 I move to strike out the clause from line 1755 to 1758, as follows:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses of Indian delegations who may visit Washington on business connected with their respective tribes, $5,000.

I think money could not be appropriated in a more foolish way than in inviting Indians to visit the city of Washington. We were visited a short time ago by the agent of the Navajoes, with some ten or fifteen Navajo Indians with their squaws, visiting all the cities of the United States, expending perhaps $10,000, either their own money or the public money. If it be their own money, it is a misappropriation of their money; and if it is the money of the people of the United States, it is still a greater misappropriation. These Indians have no business here, and they should not be encouraged to visit the city of Washington at any time. I therefore move to strike out this clause entirely.

Mr. WINDOM. This is a very small amount, and is usual; but let the vote be taken and the sense of the Senate tested whether it shall be stricken out or not. I do not wish to argue it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to strike out the clause.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 22, noes 19.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to say one word on the amendment, and but one word. This is a very small amount—only $5,000. The use of it is exactly this: Indians of some powerful tribe get chafing against the Government, or for some other reason think they are deprived of their rights; one or two of the chiefs, or three or four, are brought here where the matter can be explained to them, and they can see the power of the Government; they go back contented, and we have no Indian wars. Under this appropriation this can be done two or three times, if occasion arises, and if the occasion does not arise the money is not spent. Therefore, I think we ought to retain this amount in the bill. It is not new. It has been appropriated year after year and used in this way.

Mr. STOCKTON. The question of how far we are to buy our peace with the Indians is becoming a very serious one. I think that almost every Senator is impressed with that. Under treaty stipulations and for various other reasons, among others the argument I have just mentioned, that it is cheaper to buy peace than to fight the Indians, large appropriations are made to the Indians every year; but to propose that we shall absolutely in addition appropriate money to induce Indians to be discontented whenever they want to visit the national capital, and to know, as they well will know as soon as an appropriation is made, that a fund has been appropriated to bring them to Washington, seems to me to be very unnecessary and very much out of place. That the amount is small is certainly no argument in its favor. It might be much smaller, but the principle would be precisely the same. It is obviously an invitation to the Indians to be discontented and come to Washington to present their grievances.

Mr. President, where a tribe of Indians have a grievance sufficient to make it proper that they should send agents to Washington for them, where they cannot be heard through the Government agents who are there, if they cannot furnish sufficient funds to send their delegation, and if when they come here it is ascertained that wrong and injustice have been done to them, that it was proper, that it was wise that they should come, there is no reason in the world why Congress should not make an appropriation to return to them their expenses. But an invitation such as this is to be discontented, an invitation to come to Washington with discontent, is exactly and precisely in my judgment the result of this appropriation.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted yeas 28—nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggy, Cameron, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Howe, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, McCrery, Merrimon, Norwood, Robertson, Saulsbury, Schurz, Sherman, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Washburn—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Borah, Chandler, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Ingalls, Jones, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Spencer, Stewart, West, Windom, and Wright—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Boutwell, Brownlow, Carpenter, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Hitchcock, Logan, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Ransom, and Wadleigh—21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOGY. I wish to state, that I may not be misunderstood, that I have no disposition to consume time uselessly or to embarrass the passage of this bill; but it seems to me that there are appropriations in the bill which should not be in it, and I will therefore move to strike out of this bill appropriations amounting to between three hundred and fifty and four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. WINDOM. On what page?

Mr. BOGY. From page 67 on to page 72, ending on line 1749. I wish to strike out of this bill all appropriations under the head of "general incidental expenses of the Indian service." I will read only one paragraph, because the same objection applies to every paragraph of the kind:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Arizona, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, and for educational purposes, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $65,000.

The same wording is in the clause for the Indians of California, $60,000; the same over again for Colorado, $5,000; for Dakota, $20,000; for Idaho Territory, $10,000; for Montana Territory, $20,000; for Nevada, $15,000—which has been increased I think this morning to a larger sum, $30,000 or $35,000; New Mexico, $40,000; Oregon, $50,000; Washington Territory, $25,000; Utah Territory, $20,000; and Wyoming, $5,000.

These amounts aggregate some $350,000 or $400,000. The Indians found in each of these States and Territories are all amply provided for under their respective heads in this very bill.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me? Does he find one dollar for California?

Mr. BOGY. Yes, sir; $60,000.

Mr. SARGENT. Not one Indian there is provided for under the clauses carrying out treaty stipulations.

Mr. BOGY. Here are appropriations for the Walla Walla, the Cayuses, and Umatillas, in Washington or in Oregon; the Tabeguache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uintah bands of Utes, also on the Pacific coast.

Mr. SARGENT. Not one of them in California.

Mr. BOGY. The Tabeguache and Muache Indians are in Utah Territory, the Snake Indians in the same Territory, the Sioux in Dakota, the Yankton in Montana, the Sisseton and Walpeton are in Dakota, and so it goes on.

Mr. SARGENT. There is not one in California, as I said.

Mr. BOGY. There are very few Indians in California indeed, and yet the amount appropriated for California is $60,000. These items amount to $350,000, every dollar to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. I do not object to this appropriation on personal grounds, because I may not be of the same party with the present Secretary of the Interior. If he belonged to my party, if he were a democrat, no matter who he might be, I say that this mode of appropriating money is improper; it is extravagant. To place under the control of any officer of this Government $350,000 for the purchase of goods for all these various Indians, without limit or restraint, to use just as he may please, is nothing else than extravagance; and at a time like this, when we are called upon to tax the people, when there is a bill pending in the lower House now to make the revenue of this Government thirty millions more to meet the daily expenses of the Government, we are expending from $350,000 to $500,000 in the most wasteful way imaginable. All these Indians, except perhaps those in California, are amply provided for under different heads; they are all enumerated, and these incidental appropriations are the growth of modern times, and should not find a place in an appropriation bill of this kind.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President—

Mr. BOGY. I move to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise a question of order. The Senator had concluded his remarks; his time had expired, and I had taken the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota was recognized.

Mr. WINDOM. I think it is too late to make a motion for indefinite postponement.

Mr. BOGY. I had not yielded the floor. The hammer was knocked down before the last word was out of my mouth.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator's time had expired and the Chair so announced, and I addressed the Chair.

Mr. BOGY. You got up, but you were out of order; I was on the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This debate is out of order. The Senator from Minnesota is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator moves to strike out some three or four pages of the bill which have been contained in the Indian appropriation bills ever since I ever knew anything about them. It is essential to carrying out the present Indian policy, and I think that the present is no time to change our Indian policy. We certainly cannot consider that question here in open Senate. It has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives and by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and they have all agreed to this proposition in the bill.

Mr. BOGY. Pardon me, sir. It never has been submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, never.

Mr. WINDOM. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, I should have said; and the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate have made no such suggestion as the Senator now submits. It comes from nobody but from the Senator from Missouri. If the Senate is ready to change our entire Indian service upon the motion of a single gentleman, without any consideration by any committee, let them follow his lead and strike out these provisions; if not, let them lay the amendment on the table; and I now make that motion in order to bring the Senate to a vote on the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri lie on the table.

Mr. BOGY. I would correct the Senator from Minnesota in one respect.

Mr. WINDOM. Debate is out of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable. It is moved to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. BOGY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 30, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Cameron, Chandler, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Ramsey, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggy, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Patterson, Ransom, Sanbury, Schurz, Sprague, Stevenson, and Thurman—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Carpenter, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Harvey, Johnston, Kelly, Morton, Norwood, Pease, Pratt, Robertson, Scott, Stewart, Stockton, and Tipton—23.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. As far as these appropriations for incidental expenses are concerned, the subject is a new one to me, and I listened with great attention, and instruction too, to the remarks made by the Senator from Missouri, and I am sorry that he was not enabled to conclude them. In order to see whether the Senate is disposed to put so large a sum of money in the absolute discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, I move, in line 1652, page 68 of the bill, to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$35,000." I propose to cut down this item to about one-half. If this be adopted, I shall move to cut down other items in the same proportion.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the amendment lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not think anything can be gained, if I may be permitted to say so—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What is the question before the Senate?

Mr. THURMAN. I am going to make a question.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then make it first.

Mr. THURMAN. On line 1686, page 69, I move to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$10,000" as the amount to be appropriated for the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Dakota Territory.

I do not wish to occupy any time of the Senate upon this subject. I would only like to hear from those who are better informed upon it. The Senator from Missouri has had special means of acquiring knowledge upon this subject, and I for one would like to have the benefit of his knowledge and information upon it. It does strike me as being an improvident thing and setting a bad precedent to appropriate from three hundred and fifty to five hundred thousand dollars, to be expended, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, by agents who will expend the money thousands of miles away from the seat of Government. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Just a word or two, Mr. President. We have now entered upon a new system of tactics which I have never known before in the Senate of the United States. Having passed through these two days the amendments and the appropriations in this bill, it is now being subjected to a general assault all along the line, and by gentlemen who confess that they know nothing about it, but invite observations to be informed by somebody other than themselves, and they attack the bill at points that are as well settled in the service of the Indian Department as anything in the bill, just as prominent, just as well settled, just as well understood by anybody who has taken pains to look at the Indian service at all as any part of the bill. And yet my honorable friend from Ohio feels himself justified at this late day in this session, with so many appropriation bills pending, to make a motion which he confesses he is not well informed about, simply to invite somebody to instruct him upon a general branch of the public service.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio I think will not complain if I say that is a very extraordinary position to take upon an appropriation bill, inviting a general discussion upon a service that is as well recognized as any service connected with the government of the country in any aspect.

Mr. President, evidently we are to have a series of this sort of amendments upon this bill for purposes other than are connected with the public service.

I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. THURMAN. Does the Senator make that motion after what he has said?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do, and will continue to make such motions so often as these amendments are made.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator will be replied to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator is willing to be replied to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. On line 1700, page 70, I move to strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "ten."

Mr. President, I did not expect the Senator from Maine, after delivering a lecture to me, to move to lay the amendment on the table. I do not feel very much like being lectured this morning, and certainly not without ground for the lecture. I have not occupied in the three days this bill has been under consideration twenty minutes of the time of the Senate all put together, and I am the last man on this floor to whom the Senator ought to attribute any purpose to waste time on this bill. He had no reason whatever for any such an insinuation. Nor, sir, am I subject to reproach, because I confess that there are other Senators here better informed on this subject than I am. It would be a shame to the Committee on Appropriations and to the Indian Committee if they were not better informed on this subject than other Senators. And it is so far from being a matter of reproach that it is a matter of commendation that any Senator shall inquire of other Senators who have made the subject under consideration a special study for that information which is necessary to enable him to vote correctly. And therefore, sir, I say to my friend from Maine there was no occasion for his lecture; it was wholly out of place; and it is not the best way to further and speed the passage of this bill. I did say, and I repeat it, that it strikes me as being an evil thing to put in the discretion of one single man, acting by agents thousands of miles away, the expenditure of between three and four hundred thousand dollars of the people's money, and at a time like this. I said that was a thing that, however much it may have been sanctioned by precedent, it did seem to me the Senate ought to consider and to pause upon. Now, sir, having said all that I wish to say in reply to the Senator, I will yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, I will repeat what I said a while ago to avoid any misunderstanding. I have no disposition to delay the passage of this bill; I have no disposition to consume time uselessly. My only object is to draw the attention of the Senate and of the country to this extravagant mode of appropriating the public money, to illustrate the point that I intended to make. We voted in this bill to increase the appropriation for the Indians in New Mexico and Arizona from $400,000 to $500,000, and yet there was not a Senator on this floor who could tell within three thousand how many Indians there were in the Territory of Arizona. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] stated, and he stated with great positiveness, that there were thirty-seven hundred. The Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] from information, given to him I presume by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs who at that moment sat by him, said it was seventy-seven hundred; but there was nothing authentic; it was merely guess-work throughout; and yet we increased that appropriation from $400,000 to $500,000. There is $500,000 voted to those Indians; and here under the head of "incidental expenses" in that Territory we place under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, to be expended just as he may deem proper, this large sum of $65,000—$500,000 by specific appropriation and $65,000 under this head of incidental appropriations.

I repeat it is an extravagant mode of appropriating the public money, and my object now is to draw the attention of the Senate, no matter what may be the result of the motion, and also the attention of the country, that this thing may hereafter be arrested. I do not oppose it from a partisan stand-point at all. I am perfectly satisfied that it is an appropriation of a large sum of money that should be corrected as soon as possible. The subject has never been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate. That committee has had nothing to do with it. I am a member of the committee, and no such subject was investigated by it.

Mr. WINDOM. In order to bring the Senate to a vote, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the Indian appropriation bill, which has just passed, be printed with the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. LOGAN. On the 17th of this month the bill (S. No. 1326) to authorize the purchase of certain improvements in ordnance, and pay for the use of the same, heretofore made, was introduced by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. STOCKTON,] who moved its reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I subsequently asked its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs, supposing that to be the proper committee. I find on reading the bill, however, that it properly belongs to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I therefore move that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4669) to provide for the selection of grand and petit jurors in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1065) for the relief of J. W. Drew, late additional paymaster in the United States Army.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4740) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution that the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules of the two Houses be suspended for the residue of the present session.

AMENDMENTS TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. FERRY of Michigan, submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1876.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 4441) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30th, 1876, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Appropriations reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 10 to insert the following proviso at the end of the paragraph "for additional pay of officers and pay for instructors, professors, cadets, and musicians:"

Provided, That the President of the United States be authorized to fill any vacancy occurring at said academy by reason of death, or other cause, of any person appointed by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 23, to insert after the word "materials" the words "$14,500;" in line 24, to insert after the word "and" where it first occurs the word "for;" and in line 26, to insert after the word "men" the words "$3,000 in all;" so that the clause will read:

For repairs and improvements, timber, planks, boards, joists, wall-strips, laths, shingles, slate, tin, sheet-lead, nails, screws, locks, butts, hinges, glass, paints, oils, turpentine, varnish, stone, brick, lime, cement, plaster, hair, drain-pipe, blasting-powder, fuse, iron, steel, tools, mantels, and other similar materials, $14,500; and for pay of citizen mechanics and labor employed upon repairs and improvements that cannot be done by enlisted men, $3,000; in all, $22,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I move to add to the bill the following as an additional section:

That hereafter, until otherwise provided by law, the number of cadets appointed each year shall be one-half of the number authorized to be appointed by now existing law, and no more.

But what is the present condition of affairs? We have by far a greater excess of officers in the Army of the United States in proportion to the rank and file than exists in any other army in the world. I remember listening with great interest to a statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] a few years since, in which the relative proportion of officers to the rank and file in our Army and in the continental armies of Europe was given with minute exactness, and the number of supernumeraries in our Army was quite surprising to me, and I think to every one who heard the statement of the Senator. Now, it does seem to me that at a time like this, when we ought to be retrenching all we can, steps may be taken which will prevent this accumulation of superfluous or supernumerary officers in the Army. There is no necessity for every year adding fifty, sixty, or more officers to the Army, as we must do if we continue to appoint as many cadets as are now appointed. I do not know exactly how many graduate each year, but I do know that nearly all who graduate immediately go into the Army. They feel themselves bound by honor to serve in the Army and not to resign and go into private life, and I do know that thereby there is a prodigious number of officers to the rank and file of the Army as compared with any other army in the world.

I make this motion, therefore, to amend the bill in perfect good faith. I make it not to consume a moment of time more than is necessary to its due consideration. I hope that it will be considered by the Senate, and I hope that the Senator from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, if I can have his attention a moment, will repeat to the Senate the very valuable information he gave us on the subject of the relative number of officers to rank and file in the armies of Europe and in the Army of the United States, to which we listened with so much interest when he stated it to the Senate some years ago.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. For fear that I may be tempted to speak beyond the proper time, I move that all debate on amendments to this bill be confined to five minutes.

Mr. THURMAN. Is it in order to make that motion now? The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Chair thinks it is in order, the rule declaring that "it shall be in order at any time to move a recess; and pending an appropriation bill to move to confine debate on amendments thereto to five minutes."

Mr. THURMAN. I do not object to its consideration, and I move to amend it by adding:

And all amendments offered to the bill shall be germane to its subject-matter.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is not in order. You cannot amend the rule in that way.

Mr. THURMAN. Why not?

Mr. CONKLING. Because to amend the rule you must give one day's notice in writing.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I raise the question of order on the amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. That was the rule formerly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I raise the question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that under the existing rule of the Senate the motion to amend, made by the Senator from Ohio, is not in order.

Mr. THURMAN. I appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish simply to state the grounds of my appeal. That I have a right to do. The ground of objection to the amendment is that one day's notice of it was not given. How could one day's notice of an offer to amend the motion of the Senator from Maine be given when the motion of the Senator from Maine was only made to-day when nobody could foresee that it would be moved? I think that sufficiently shows that any such rule about one day's notice does not apply at all to this. My motion is not to change any existing rule of the Senate. If it were, then it would require one day's notice. One day's notice is necessary of a motion to change an existing rule of the Senate; but my motion is not that. When the Senate has agreed that a Senator may at any moment move to limit debate on an appropriation bill to five minutes, it seems to me it necessarily follows that the rule requiring one day's notice of an amendment cannot apply when that is under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Maine was made under an existing rule of the Senate. The decision is not upon the rule, but upon the question whether or not the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is in order. The Chair thinks that it is not in order.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. And from that the Senator from Ohio takes an appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question then is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

The question being put, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the motion made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] to confine debate upon amendments to the pending bill to five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am going to vote for the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio. I believe there are educated more military officers than the best interests of the country require. I have been and now am an earnest supporter of that school; I believe in its efficiency, in its necessity. I give to the gallant men who have gone from it all the credit they are entitled to; but upon the simple ground that we are educating vastly more than we want, this is the time when I think restriction may be properly applied. But I want to make a suggestion to the Senator from Ohio for his consideration. The law, if I understand it, now provides that there shall be appointed from each congressional district a cadet once in four years. The amendment, if adopted in its present form, I think, will lead to some embarrassment in its administration. I think if the Senator will add these words to his amendment they will cover the objection which I have:

To be appointed alternately from the several congressional districts.

Mr. THURMAN. I accept that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Ohio makes an inquiry in reference to the disparity existing between the officers and enlisted men in this country and in foreign armies. I have not before me now the statement which I once had, and therefore cannot repeat what I did on a former occasion accurately, and on that account will not attempt to do it. I was then attempting to get a law passed through Congress reducing the number of officers in the Army. When I failed in that I offered it as an amendment to an appropriation bill here at the last session of Congress on the ground that that appropriation bill suspended recruiting in the Army until the Army should be reduced to twenty-five thousand. I therefore moved an amendment that the officers should be cut off in due proportion as the soldiers of the Army were, and stated what I then remembered, which I could not exactly state now. There are more officers in our Army commanding, according to the number of men, than in any other Army that I have knowledge of.

But in reference to this amendment I believe my attention was called to it by the Senator from Ohio, and without reflection then I did not know but what it could be done on this bill; but my judgment is that it would not be well to do it in this way, and for this reason: each district in the United States is entitled to one representative at West Point, that is, one cadet.

Mr. THURMAN. Once in four years.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir. That appointment is to be made by the member of Congress or recommended by the member of Congress representing that district. Senators have no representation at West Point at all. The President has a right to appoint ten cadets every year, I think, at large.

Mr. BOREMAN. Yes; that is the number.

Mr. LOGAN. The only representation Senators have at West Point is if they can by recommendation of the President get a young man appointed.

Mr. THURMAN. That is not according to law.

Mr. LOGAN. That has nothing to do with law. They may or may not do it; but that depends on circumstances. The Representatives having control of this, my own judgment about it is now, after reflection, that it might possibly, I do not say cause a defeat of the bill, but it might derange its progress in some way. I know when I was a member of the House I was very tenacious as to my right to this appointment. This is the only reason I suggest that it might in that way put the bill in some hazard. I think it would be better if it is desirable—and I do not know but that it is desirable and my impression is in that direction—to do it by a law separate and apart connected with the organization of the Army, which I hope will take place some time soon, though it cannot be done this session. There are reasons I could repeat to the Senate for no attempt having been made at this session. My judgment is it would be better not to append this to the present bill. Without committing myself either way, and for that reason I can vote against the amendment, because I think it is not matured sufficiently and would create confusion, and a great deal of confusion, in reference to the regulation of the appointment under existing law. I think it is not sufficiently matured, and for that reason I shall vote against it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It turns out about as I expected, that almost from the nature of the case this proposition changes this branch of the public service. It may be that in a certain sense it is a good thing to do; but it is not, as a general proposition, a good thing to do on an appropriation bill, for the reasons that are apparent now and are always apparent, more or less. The Senator from Ohio supposed that the Military Committee, who are presumed to have some information on this subject in common with all of us, would probably approve this. It appears the chairman of that committee does not. My only objection to it is that while on first blush it seems to me that this service might be trimmed down, being perhaps too large, it is not a good thing to venture to do it upon a sudden on an appropriation bill. Every year we have more or less errors that are committed in this way. Therefore, with a view of testing the sense of the Senate, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. THURMAN. Now, is that fair?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that the amendment, as modified, lie on the table.

Mr. THURMAN asked for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Conkling, Cragin, Dennis, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Spencer, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Boggs, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Saulsbury, Sherman, Stevenson, Stockton, and Thurman—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bayard, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Howe, Jones, Lewis, Norwood, Ransom, Robertson, Schurz, Scott, Sprague, Stewart, Tipton, and Wadleigh—27.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. THURMAN. I now offer the same amendment in a different form, so as to obviate the objection that has been made; and upon it I wish to say a word to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as an additional section the following:

That hereafter, until otherwise provided by law, the number of cadets appointed each year shall be one-half the number authorized to be appointed by now existing law, and no more; and hereafter there shall be appointed one cadet in each eight years instead of in four years as now provided by law.

Mr. THURMAN. The only practical difficulty there was in the way of the amendment as it stood was that the law now requires one cadet to be appointed from each congressional district in four years, whereas if you cut down the number one-half, as the amendment proposed, there might be some practical difficulty in executing the law. Now, I propose that instead of a cadet being appointed once in four years from each congressional district, he shall be appointed once in eight years; and that will remove all possible practicable difficulty out of the way. Instead of dividing the congressional districts into four classes as they are now divided by the Secretary of War they will be divided into eight classes, and the law will be executed just as smoothly as it is now.

Mr. President, not one Senator has said that it would not be a wise thing to cut down the number of cadets one-half. That would leave us about forty graduating each year. There are now about eighty or ninety appointed each year. Cut them down one-half and between forty and fifty will be appointed each year, and somewhere about forty will graduate each year. That surely is a sufficient number to add each year to the officers of the Army. Not a Senator has said, therefore, that it would not be a wise thing to cut down one-half. The only objection made was that it might not be practicable to carry it into effect. The amendment as I now offer it removes that difficulty out of the way of carrying it into effect, and the law will be just as simple as it is at present.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, it seems to me that there is no propriety in legislating on so important a subject as this, on an appropriation bill. In fact, it seems to me to be unfair to one co-ordinate branch of the Government. The President has a right to approve or disapprove a bill in reference to so important a subject; and yet if we place it on an appropriation bill he cannot give expression to his opinion without vetoing and defeating the appropriation. For that reason it seems to me to be very improper that this legislation should be upon this bill. If anything is to be done, it ought to be on a bill coming from the Committee on Military Affairs, and be calmly considered and submitted to the President.

But aside from that, I think there is no propriety in comparing our military system with that of other countries and saying that we have here more officers than they have there. It is the glory of our country that we have no standing army, that our people are the army, and all we need is to have efficient officers who can command thousands and hundreds of thousands in time of war. It is said that some eighty are graduated each year. The gentlemen who are there graduated are accomplished men. They seek useful employment in connection with the Government as engineers, and doing this important work in the mean time stand ready, as soon as there is a necessity for them in the field, to take command of our armies. If this measure was up regularly, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs as a bill, I should be opposed to it, but there is certainly no propriety in tacking it on to this bill.

Mr. MORTON. I think that this amendment is entitled to more consideration than it is likely to receive at this time. It is true that we have more officers in this country for the rank and file than in any other country, but that is in precise accordance with our military theory. Our theory is that we shall be prepared for war, not by maintaining a standing army of hundreds of thousands of men, as European powers do, but that we shall be prepared for war by having a competent number of educated officers, who when war shall come will be prepared to instruct our people in the art of war. This being our theory of government, we have a larger number of officers according to the actual force in the field than any other country. If we were to reduce the number of our officers so that they would correspond with the actual number of the rank and file, then we should not be prepared in case of an emergency with the number of educated officers necessary to go into the field at once and to instruct an army.

Believing that this legislation would now be premature and not well considered, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. THURMAN. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggs, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Pratt, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, and Thurman—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Clayton, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Norwood, Patterson, Robertson, Schurz, Spencer, Stewart, and Tipton—23.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know whether I want to offer an amendment, but I wish to make an inquiry of the chairman. On line 147 I find:

Compensation of Librarian, $120.

For pay of Librarian's assistant, $1,000.

Perhaps it may be all right; I am not aware how it is; but it seems to me to be something requiring explanation. To bring up the question, I move to strike out line 159 and on that I wish to make a remark. The compensation of the librarian I find to be fixed in the bill at $120, and on the line which I have moved to strike out the compensation of his assistant is fixed at $1,000. I do not understand why that is so. It may be all right. I simply have offered the amendment for the purpose of having an explanation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My understanding is that the librarian is detailed from the Army and this $120 is an additional compensation.

Mr. DAVIS. My recollection of the case is as the chairman says, that the librarian has other duties; in other words, he is an officer of the Army, and this $120 is additional compensation for taking care of the library.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I withdraw the amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPRAGUE. On behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, I move to take up the pension appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 4677) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1876, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to offer an amendment to this bill, and it is unnecessary to say that I offer it in good faith. It is not an amendment that is germane to the purpose of the bill; but it is one the importance of which I think will be recognized by every Senator on this floor, and feeling that there may not be an opportunity of presenting it otherwise and securing the action of both Houses, I offer it as an amendment to this bill if it is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is to add the following as additional sections:

SEC. — That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives, at the hour of one o'clock, on the last Wednesday in January next succeeding the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; one teller shall be appointed on the part of the Senate, and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, the certificates of the electoral votes; and said tellers, having read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses then assembled, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been counted, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, and the names of the persons, if any, elected, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses. If, upon the reading of any such certificate by the tellers, any question shall arise in regard to counting the votes therein certified, the same having been stated by the Presiding Officer, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and said question shall be submitted to the body for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, shall, in like manner, submit said question to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State, to the counting of which objections have been made, shall be rejected except by the affirmative vote of the two Houses. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately reassemble, and the Presiding Officer shall then announce the decision of the question submitted. And any other question pertinent to the object for which the two Houses are assembled may be submitted and determined in like manner.

SEC. — That if more than one return shall be received by the President of the Senate from a State, purporting to be the certificates of electoral votes given at the last preceding election for President and Vice-President in such State, all such returns shall be opened by him in the presence of the two Houses when assembled to count the votes; and that return from such State shall be counted which the two Houses acting separately shall decide to be the true and valid return.

SEC. — That when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or for the decision of any other question pertinent thereto, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question ten minutes, and not oftener than once: Provided, That after such debate has lasted two hours, it shall be in the power of a majority of each House to direct that the main question shall be put without further debate.

SEC. — At such joint meeting of the two Houses, seats shall be provided as follows: For the President of the Senate, the Speaker's chair; for the Speaker, immediately upon his left; the Senators in the body of the Hall upon the right of the Presiding Officer; for the Representatives, in the body of the Hall not provided for the Senators; for the tellers, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives, at the Clerk's desk; for the other officers of the two Houses, in front of the Clerk's desk and upon each side of the Speaker's platform. Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the electoral votes are all counted and the result declared; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess not beyond the next day at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that upon this bill the five-minute rule as to amendments be in force.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to appeal to the Senate to sustain the Committee on Appropriations in the passage of the bill without amending it in this extraordinary manner. I therefore submit a motion to lay the amendment on the table, and ask for the yeas and nays upon the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the amendment lie on the table, and on that question asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 32, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggs, Boreman, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Pratt, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Schurz, Sherman, Sprague, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Wright—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Boutwell, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Flanagan, Harvey, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Ramsey, Sargent, Spencer, Stewart, West, and Windom—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones, Scott, Stevenson, Wadleigh, and Washburn—19.

So the motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to strike out from the amendment I offered before a sentence and reoffer it, and I want to precede the offer by one statement. The effect of this proposition is to repeal the twenty-second joint rule as it now stands, so that the presidential vote of a State cannot be rejected simply by one House, but it will require the concurrent vote of the two Houses to do it. As the rule now stands, the next presidential election can be thrown into the House of Representatives, no difference what the vote may be before the people.

I had supposed there was a general concurrence in the necessity of repealing that rule; and therefore I offer the proposition upon this bill, believing that it will not have the effect to detain the bill long by discussion. But whether it does or not, is there a more important question to be considered than this one? I have observed, and observed with some surprise, that our democratic friends, I believe with only one exception, voted to lay this amendment on the table. I had been led to believe that they were as well satisfied as we that it was important to amend that rule. If this is to be a political matter, and if this rule is to be so left that the next election can be thrown into the House of Representatives, let us all understand it, and let those who vote against this amendment take the responsibility for it. Let us have a clear and distinct understanding if this is to be a political matter.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I voted in favor of laying this amendment on the table, and of course for that vote, as for all other votes that I give, I expect to be responsible; entirely so. The reason of my so voting was this: I never had had an opportunity of seeing the bill now moved as an amendment. I do not think it has ever been before the Senate.

Mr. MORTON. I will state to my friend that this amendment is the bill reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections some two weeks ago and printed and laid upon the tables of Senators.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I see that it was reported on the 6th of February—

Mr. MORTON. I would state one thing further to the Senate, that it leaves the twenty-second joint rule so far as details are concerned except reversing the order, so that instead of permitting the vote of one House to throw out the electoral vote of a State, it requires the affirmative vote of both Houses to reject the presidential vote of a State.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I see that this bill was reported on the 6th of February and laid on our tables; but I do not suppose that many of us indulge in the amusement of reading bills that are laid on our tables, until they are called to our attention in some manner; so that when I voted I never had read this bill which the Senator moves as an amendment; and I certainly think that if it is a matter of so grave importance as my friend from Indiana says—and in that I agree with him—we ought to have an opportunity of reading it and considering it. Now, if there is any factious opposition to some measure of this kind, before the conclusion of the present session it will be very easy for us to place it upon some other appropriation bill after we understand the subject.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I do not know precisely what is meant by "factious opposition" to a measure of this kind or to any other measure that has been before the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If my friend will permit me, I did not say there was any. I said if it should so turn out that there should be any we could meet it.

Mr. BAYARD. I scarcely supposed the honorable Senator from New Jersey could have meant such a thing. The honorable Senator from Indiana seems to have been able to detect in a votelately taken where by a large majority his amendment to the pension appropriation bill was laid upon the table something of party political significance. Mr. President, the reason why I consider that a bill of this kind should not be offered as an amendment to an appropriation bill is in the first place that it is a vicious kind of legislation. It is one that the Senate deliberately in two succeeding sessions of Congress excluded. Indeed at the present session a rule was offered, I think by the honorable Senator who now occupies the chair, [Mr. SARGENT,] which was in the same language precisely as the rule we adopted a year ago and two years ago, that debate on appropriation bills should be limited to five minutes on each amendment offered, that a motion to lay on the table should extend only to the amendment and be decided without debate, and then also that no amendment should be offered which did not touch the subject-matter referred to in the bill. A resolution was offered subsequently by the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] which the Senate saw fit to adopt, so that the Senate is free, as it is now, to ingraft upon an appropriation bill any subject-matter, however incongruous, however inconsistent, however unfit to be decided under the short rules of debate that are perfectly applicable to money measures.

Mr. President, whenever the Senate shall see fit to bring up and discuss this exceedingly important bill of the honorable Senator from Indiana I shall be very glad to give attention, and, if I can give aid in coming to a correct conclusion, give that also. I appreciate as fully as he does the necessity for a just consideration of this matter, and I abhor as fully as he does tinging such a question as this with party sentiment. But, sir, it would be impossible to discuss this measure, in all its far-reaching significance, under the five-minute rule, and for that reason alone I hope that not only it will not be placed upon this bill as an amendment, but that it will not be permitted to go as an amendment upon any appropriation bill under this rule of limited debate. I recognize its importance most fully. I have some criticisms to make on this bill. I do not consider that it would be productive of the good the honorable Senator suggests; on the contrary, I think I can demonstrate that it will be rather more injurious if possible than the present rule which has existed since 1865. Therefore I trust there will be no attempt, not only upon the present appropriation bill but upon any other, to introduce questions of a political nature; I do not mean of a partisan nature, I mean in the proper sense of the word "political" questions touching the political government of the country, touching as this does a very profound constitutional question both of the power of Congress to deal with the subject and of the effect of the action which they may take.

I hope therefore that this question, if the honorable Senator from Indiana desires it, may be taken up at such time as suits him, but shall be under an untrammelled rule of debate. If not, the result would simply be that we must resort to the motion to indefinitely postpone the whole bill in order to have a proper time for discussion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was not present in the Senate Chamber when the Senator from Indiana offered this amendment; I came in during the roll-call, and ascertaining that this was a proposition of a legislative character and an amendment to an appropriation bill, I had no hesitation in voting to lay it on the table, and that vote would be defensible, entirely justifiable, and entirely proper, in my judgment, on the simple ground that this is an amendment to an appropriation entirely dehors the subject-matter of the bill itself. It is on an entirely different matter. In other words, the House of Representatives propose to appropriate $30,000,000 to pay the pensions provided by law; and the Senate says, "Well, we will do that if you will change the mode of counting the votes for President; we will pass a bill to carry into effect existing laws if you will change the joint rules of the two Houses." That is the proposition. I cannot defend such a proposition at any time unless under circumstances that would justify almost revolutionary measures. Legislative amendments to appropriation bills are not justifiable except in the clearest case, and I submit to my honorable friend from Indiana that he and I and those who are with us are the last persons to justify a system of tactics which may be resorted to by others. Sir, the law of our Government compels us to appropriate money to carry into effect existing laws, not to obstruct legislation; not by the power of one House to make unreasonable terms and conditions upon the other House. That is always vicious and never justifiable except in extreme cases.

But, sir, to go a little further: I have now read the Senator's bill, and its general scope and purpose, it seems to me, is right; but I think the whole subject-matter of this bill can be passed upon by an amendment of the joint rules of the two Houses without the action of the President or without even the forms of law. The two Houses, in the presence of each other, are called upon to perform a certain ministerial duty, and the joint rule of the two Houses points out the mode and manner in which this shall be done. No one can be more impressed with the defects in the present rule than I. I heartily sympathize with the Senator from Indiana in the necessity of having a change, and a change at the present session of Congress; but that can be done by an amendment to the joint rule.

Mr. MORTON. I will say to my friend that will take just as long; and when I had that proposition up in the simple form of changing a joint rule and it was suggested all around here that it should be in the form of a bill, and I withdrew the amendment in obedience to those suggestions and this bill was reported to meet that view that it ought to be a law and not a joint rule of the two Houses which would authorize the throwing out of a presidential vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope my friend's interruption will not be counted out of my time. Notwithstanding what the Senator has said, there is no doubt that it is entirely within the power of the two Houses to reach the matter by an amendment of their joint rules, which is much easier to pass than a bill, and which is not to be submitted to the President of the United States, who has nothing by the Constitution to do with this ministerial act.

A single phrase which the Senator from Indiana knows how to frame would correct the material thing, that is the defect of the joint rule, by providing that it shall require the concurrent vote of both Houses to exclude from the count the vote of any State; and that is all that is material to be corrected in the rule which he seeks to abrogate. But I would not stand upon a form, and I will say to my honorable friend from Indiana that if he will call up this bill of his after the passage of the present bill, I shall be perfectly willing to vote with him to take it up and pass it; and I do not think there ought to be or will be any considerable opposition to it. But it seems to me that it is bad for us to set the example of making amendments of this character to appropriation bills, certainly until facts are apparent developing an intention to defeat an important provision by mere factions opposition. I have not seen any such thing yet, and I hope we shall not encourage it by resorting to extraordinary proceedings.

My opinion is that the Senate ought to proceed with the consideration of these money bills and pass them out of the way promptly, quickly. The majority of the Senate ought to take the responsibility of passing such bills as they may deem necessary, and then throw upon the minority the responsibility of resorting to factious opposition or unusual or dangerous expedients. Let us perform our simple duty in the ordinary line of precedents, and I would not invite any exceptional proceedings on the part of the opposition by any example set by ourselves.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In reply to the remark of the Senator from Ohio, I would say that I think he cannot point to any factious opposition made by the members of the democratic party to any appropriation bill whatever that has been before the Senate. We have been at all times willing to take up these bills and discuss them fairly—discuss them under the five-minute rule, which in my judgment, even on appropriation bills, is an improper rule; but nevertheless it has been adopted and we have acquiesced in it; at any rate we have made no factious opposition to anything.

Now, in reference to the Indian appropriation bill, the democratic members of the Senate consumed less time than the republican members, and we have not been disposed to offer any factious opposition to the passage of any of the appropriation bills at any time, nor in reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. My objection and my vote against it was not given because of any partisan feeling, for I am not certain that when his bill gets fair before the Senate I may not vote for it. My objection was that it was a very improper amendment to offer to an appropriation bill; that it cannot be properly discussed under the five-minute rule. It does certainly involve very grave considerations. One consideration may be whether this action of the Senate and House of Representatives by the enactment of a law can control the counting of the votes; and that is a very grave question. Other grave considerations arise in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana which ought not to be limited to a five-minutes debate. I voted against it as an amendment to an appropriation bill. I am not clear that as a separate and distinct law I should vote against it. My vote, therefore, against the Senator's amendment was not from any partisan feeling, but because I honestly believe that the amendment which he offers involves considerations which ought not to be limited to a debate of five minutes. That was the only ground on which I acted, and I apprehend that was the ground on which all the votes on this side of the House were given against that amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. After what has been said by the Senator from Delaware and my colleague, it might seem superfluous for me to say anything on this subject; but there are reasons why it is proper that I should say a word upon it.

In answer to an expression of surprise by the Senator from Indiana at the vote last taken and his intimation that it was a party vote, I undertake to say that there was nothing further from party than the vote that was cast on his motion. As the Senator now offers the bill, with the last sentence of the first section omitted, according to my understanding of the bill, I am for it; but there are others who think that I have misapprehended the effect of the bill. I think they misapprehend it. This bill has been criticised in some of the public journals as well as in private conversation in such wise that those thinking it a beneficial measure have a duty to perform by explaining it according to their understanding of it, and removing these objections, if they can be removed by argument. Therefore my vote to lay the amendment of the Senator from Indiana on the table was induced by no hostility whatever to his bill; and I say to him now that just as soon as the appropriation bills are out of the way I will vote to take his bill up; and he can ask nothing more than that; but I do protest against putting political measures upon appropriation bills. I shall never forget that the worst bill in my judgment that has passed this Senate since I have been a member of it was after midnight by putting it on an appropriation bill with the five-minutes debate. In that case a bill of fifteen or sixteen sections was fastened as an amendment upon an appropriation bill and put through. It is very true that there was an extended debate upon it, because to get rid of the rule I moved to indefinitely postpone an important appropriation bill—an attitude in which I did not wish to be placed; but I was compelled to be placed in that attitude in order to consider a bill then brought in for the first time in the Senate, consisting of fifteen or sixteen sections, of the most important character.

I am therefore opposed to any general legislation, especially any political legislation, upon appropriation bills. I will not waste the time of the Senate upon appropriation bills. There is no member here who has done so. I do not believe that an amendment has been offered or a remark made about any appropriation bill at this session of the Senate that was not made in perfect good faith and for laudable purposes. There has been no disposition to waste time at all; but when it comes to putting political measures upon appropriation bills the inevitable result must be a motion to postpone the bill indefinitely, and then enlarged debate. I hope, therefore, that no such thing will be done. It was for that reason alone that I voted to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to appeal to my friend the Senator from Indiana to withdraw his amendment. There seems to be a general disposition on the part of all who have spoken on the subject to give him an opportunity to bring it to the attention of the Senate as an independent measure, and it seems to me that he would serve the interests which he advocates better in that way than by forcing me to the unpleasant duty of peremptorily enforcing the rules on the amendment.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to say but a single word. I made the remark about the vote being partisan from the fact that our democratic friends voted solidly to lay upon the table and with a few republicans carried it, while twenty-two republicans voted against the motion. We have had a number of party votes or party considerations disposed of here within a few weeks past in about the same way. This measure is important. The next House of Representatives is democratic. I hope that that consideration will not possibly enter into any vote that may be taken upon it; but as the rule stands the election can be thrown into the House of Representatives no difference what the vote may be by the people.

Mr. THURMAN. That cannot be unless there are three candidates.

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. Unless there be a tie.

Mr. MORTON. The Constitution requires the person elected to have a majority of all the electors appointed, and if by objections to the votes of particular States they are thrown out so that no candidate has a majority of all the electors appointed, the election goes into the House.

Mr. THURMAN. That must be where there is a tie.

Mr. MORTON. No; no tie is required; a majority of all the electors appointed are necessary.

I withdraw the amendment in view of the vote that has been taken, and I shall perhaps take occasion to bring it forward again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SARGENT in the chair.) The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPIERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4833) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and remit certain taxes and penalties claimed to be due from mining and other corporations in the sixth collection district of Michigan;

A bill (H. R. No. 4434) giving certain authority to the accounting officers of the Treasury in the case of John L. Smith;

A bill (H. R. No. 4149) for the sale of timber lands in the States of California and Oregon and in the Territories of the United States; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 160) providing for the restoration of the original Declaration of Independence.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 3717) granting a pension to Sarah McAdams;

A bill (H. R. No. 3708) granting a pension to Eunice Wilson, mother of John C. Wilson, late private Company D, Forty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 3700) granting a pension to Teter Wolfgang;

A bill (S. No. 769) for the relief of Major J. W. Nichols, paymaster United States Army; and

A bill (S. No. 1065) for the relief of J. W. Drew, late additional paymaster in the United States Army.

NATIONAL CEMETERY AT YORK.

Mr. WEST. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 4529, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the ensuing fiscal year.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment to take up the bill (H. R. No. 4681) in relation to a national cemetery at York, Pennsylvania. The objections made the other day have been withdrawn, and there will be no opposition to it now. I trust the Senator from Louisiana will yield.

Mr. WEST. The Senator from Pennsylvania knows that I would extend a courtesy to him as willingly as I would to any Senator on this floor, but under the rule I am constrained to object.

Mr. CAMERON. I understood the Senator would treat me with all the courtesy imaginable, but I want him on this occasion to do a little more. [Laughter.] I only want five minutes of the time of the Senate to pass a bill which I am very anxious should be passed before Congress adjourns. Already time enough has been occupied to have passed it three or four times if I had been listened to. I trust the Senator from Louisiana will allow me five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana insist on his objection.

Mr. CAMERON. He does not insist.

Mr. WEST. I withdraw the objection to let the Senate vote upon it, but with the simple notification that I must not be appealed to in the same way again.

The bill (H. R. No. 4681) in relation to a national cemetery at York, Pennsylvania, was read.

Mr. WEST. I must insist that the consideration of that bill shall be liable to a call for the regular order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have an explanation of the bill from the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMERON. There should be no objection to the passage of this bill. The citizens of York have built a fence, built a house, and done everything to inclose the graves of all these people, rebels as well as Union soldiers—

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish simply the Senate to understand it.

Mr. WEST. I rise to inquire if the Senator from Ohio objects to the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; but I wish to state in the nature of an argument that this will lead to innumerable claims. In the little city in which I live there lie the remains of a great many soldiers who were brought home and buried there without head-stones, except what have been furnished by the people of the neighborhood. If the Government is to carry out the principle of making every spot of ground in the United States where dead soldiers are buried subject to the rules which govern national cemeteries established by the War Department, it will involve not only large expense but infinite difficulty. It is not a matter which I know much about, but I know the example once set for York, Pennsylvania, will be followed in many cities where they have set aside within certain inclosures ground for the burial of soldiers. If the precedent is once established of considering those in the nature of national cemetery grounds, it will involve a very large expenditure of money, and it is of very doubtful propriety indeed. I think the dead buried in these private cemeteries had better rest as they are, and the local charity, the local sympathy, the local feeling will undoubtedly erect over their remains proper monuments to their memory.

Mr. CAMERON. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. WEST. I was not aware of the nature of this bill. On the assurance of the Senator from Pennsylvania that it was a bill which would provoke no discussion, I permitted him to offer it to the Senate for a vote. I now call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be laid aside.

Mr. CAMERON. I hope that the Senator will allow me to say that this ought not to have provoked any discussion.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole; and the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be acted in their order as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for the office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General, in line 35 of section 1, after the words "directed to" to strike out the words "take said weights and require them to be" and insert "have the mails weighed as often as now provided by law by the employees of the Post-Office Department, and have the weights;" in line 39, to strike out the word "the" before "employees" and insert the word "said;" and after "employés" strike out "of the Post-Office Department;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General:

For inland mail transportation, $17,548,000; and out of the appropriation for inland mail transportation the Postmaster-General is authorized hereafter to pay the expenses of taking the weights of mails on railroad routes, as provided by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1874," approved March 3, 1873; and he is hereby directed to have the mails weighed as often as now provided by law by the employees of the Post-Office Department, and have the weights stated verified to him by said employees, under such instructions as he may consider just to the Post-Office Department and the railroad companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 59 of section 1, after the word "hereby," to strike out "authorized" and insert "required;" so as to make the clause read:

For preparing and publishing post-route maps, $30,000; and out of this appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby required to pay all the expense of employing clerks, lithographers, experts, and other persons whose services may be necessary in the preparation and publication of said maps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of appropriations for the "office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General" after the word "postage-stamps," in line 68 of section 1, to insert "including official stamps;" so as to make the clause read:

For the manufacture of adhesive postage-stamps, including official stamps, $149,764.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. I move to apply the five-minute rule in reference to debate on amendments to this bill.

Mr. THURMAN. If a motion is to be made to strike out—

Mr. WEST. I call for the question on my motion; it is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is true. The Senator from Ohio will suspend. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the five-minutes rule be applied to the bill under consideration. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DAVIS. Before that is put—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DAVIS. I can move to indefinitely postpone and debate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator cannot move to indefinitely postpone this motion. The rule requires that this motion shall be decided without debate, and the Chair will put the question, which is upon the motion of the Senator from Louisiana to apply the five-minutes rule to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I rose for the purpose of suggesting that the motion be not agreed to but it is agreed to. Whenever the question arises on the provision in this bill repealing the Pacific Mail subsidy, the Senate will find that that five-minute rule will not work.

Mr. WEST. I understand that.

Mr. THURMAN. The Judiciary Committee have had that subject under consideration for some time, and I know, without intimating the opinion of any member of that committee upon the subject, that it cannot be disposed of under a five-minutes debate.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it the desire of the Senator having the bill in charge that we shall go through with the reading of the bill before amendments are offered, or does he want amendments acted on as the reading progresses?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will first be acted on and then the others.

Mr. RAMSEY. I submit an amendment from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to this bill to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be received and referred.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "shall," in line 97 of section one, to strike out "not;" after the word "in" to strike out "more than" and insert "only;" in line 98, after "District of Columbia," strike out "nor" and insert "and;" and after the word "prices" strike out "exceeding the regular and ordinary rates charged by such newspaper to other advertisers" and insert "satisfactory to the Postmaster-General;" so as to make the clause read:

For advertising, $100,000: Provided, That hereafter the mail lettings for the States of Maryland and Virginia and for the District of Columbia shall be advertised in only one newspaper published in the District of Columbia, and at prices satisfactory to the Postmaster-General; and so much of section 3826 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as refers to the publication of advertisements in newspapers be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. WEST. On behalf of the committee I desire to perfect that clause by adding after the words "Postmaster-General," in line 101, the following words:

Not exceeding the customary rates paid in the city of Baltimore.

So as not to leave it entirely discretionary with the Postmaster-General to pay any rate, although no doubt the utmost confidence would be felt in his judgment and discretion in that matter, but to adapt the rate to the nearest populous city where large newspapers are published.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to move an amendment to add a single word. Will it have to be done after this is acted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After this vote shall be taken on this amendment to the amendment, another amendment to the amendment will be in order.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. Now, after the words added in the last amendment I move to insert "for ordinary commercial advertisements;" so as to read:

Not exceeding the customary rates paid in the city of Baltimore for ordinary commercial advertisements.

Mr. WEST. I will not object to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the first section.

Mr. WEST. Before the reading of the bill proceeds any further, I desire to ask the attention of the Senate to a statement that I am required to make on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations with reference to a clause in the second section. The clause beginning with line 18 on page 6 of the bill repeals what is known as the secondary contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for its service to China semi-monthly. When this bill was considered in committee I was instructed by the committee to say that they reported back the bill in that respect without amendment and with no recommendation in regard to that particular clause for the reason that the subject-matter of this clause had already been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report to the Senate whether in their opinion the contract was valid, or whether Congress possessed the power to annul it. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary here; but if there is any other member of the committee present, I think he will corroborate what I say. So in the consideration of the question it is before the Senate without any recommendation by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. THURMAN. A resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary instructing that committee to inquire whether the contract made by the Post-Office Department with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, of some date in 1872 or 1873, in pursuance of the act of 1872, was still obligatory upon the United States, and if not obligatory whether it was expedient to repeal it. I am not quite sure that I have given the language of the resolution exactly, but that was the effect of it.

That resolution did not pass the Senate, but was referred to the committee without having passed the Senate and therefore contained no instructions. It was merely sent to the committee of course to see whether the committee would recommend its passage in that shape. The committee were of opinion that so far as it related to the expediency of annulling the contract in case it is no longer obligatory upon the United States, or in case the United States has the right to annul it, that question belonged more properly to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads than to the Committee on the Judiciary, and hence the committee reported a substitute for the resolution to the Senate by which the Committee on the Judiciary was strictly instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether that contract is obligatory upon the United States or whether the United States has the right to put an end to it without any violation of law. Upon that question thus referred to the Judiciary Committee no decision has been arrived at by that committee. I have been expecting that we would make a report upon it to-day; but for reasons known to the Senators here there was no meeting of that committee to-day.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will my honorable friend allow me to suggest that the bill be read through and the amendment of the committee acted on, and then we can return to this subject.

Mr. WEST. I suggest to my honorable friend from Maine that we are acting on the bill and if we could take this question now—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What amendment is now pending?

Mr. WEST. No amendment, but I prefaced the reading of this section by the remark I did, and the Senator knows very well that as soon as the Clerk reads the clause, unless it is objected to, it is incorporated in the bill, so that therefore it is really a pending question.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is open to amendment; and my suggestion is that as there is no amendment proposed by the committee here, we pass on and conclude the bill with such amendments as are proposed by the committee, and then of course the whole text of the bill will be open to amendment.

Mr. WEST. Reserving the point that the Senate does not now in Committee of the Whole adopt that clause—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At a later period while the Senate is in Committee of the Whole amendments to this provision will be in order.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly; nothing is concluded by simply passing over it.

Mr. THURMAN. I have no privilege one way or the other. The Senator from Louisiana asked me in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to state the facts in regard to the reference of this question to the committee. That is all I have stated. We have made no report upon it. The only question before us was as to the right of the Government to treat this contract as annulled, and on that we have made no report as yet. Whether this bill had better be postponed until the committee make a report or not is a question for the Senate.

Mr. MERRIMON. I would inquire of the Senator from Ohio if this is the Pacific Mail subsidy about which there has been so much scandal?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MERRIMON. Then for one I am very anxious to ascertain whether Congress has power to repeal the law providing for it. If it has, I am very sure that I desire to vote for its repeal.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. All this is premature; there is really no question before the Senate at the present time. When the reading of the bill is once concluded and the amendments of the committee acted on, all this will be traversed and again come up.

Mr. MERRIMON. At the proper time I will make the point.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out the second clause of section 3, in the following words:

That the certificate authorized to be made by section 13 of the act of June 23, 1874, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875," may be made by any ex-member of Congress or ex-Delegate within nine months after the expiration of his term.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That provisions of section 13 of the act of June 23, 1874, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," shall apply to ex-members of Congress and ex-Delegates, for the period of nine months after the expiration of their terms as members and Delegates, and postage on public documents mailed by such persons shall be as provided in said section.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to inquire to what that refers?

Mr. WEST. It gives the outgoing members of Congress and Senators the privilege until the next session of sending their public documents away upon the same terms that they would have if they remained in Congress until that time.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator having this bill in charge. If he will turn to page 7, lines 30 and 31 of section 2, he will find these words:

For official postage-stamps for the Post-Office Department, $986,000.

I wish to inquire whether this appropriation—

Mr. WEST. I ask the Senator to allow the reading of the bill to be concluded.

Mr. THURMAN. I thought we had reached the end.

Mr. WEST. No, there is one more section.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. Now I wish to know if this sum of $986,000 is for post-office stamps for the Post-Office Department alone?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. It does not include the other Departments, then?

Mr. WEST. No, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to have some explanation of it because of my ignorance. I was reproached this morning for inquiring about anything of which I was ignorant. I hope the chairman of the committee will pardon me for making my ignorance the groundwork of an inquiry as to this appropriation.

Mr. WEST. I presume the Senator is aware that Congress has by previous legislation required payment for the transmission of all mail matter, whether official or otherwise, through the mails of the United States. The Postmaster-General cannot send a letter to the postmaster at Baltimore on official business without paying the postage upon it with a stamp printed specially for that purpose. This makes the official business of the Government through the Post-Office Department payable out of the general Treasury instead of as hitherto out of the service of the Post-Office Department itself.

Mr. THURMAN. This, then, is not for the postage-stamps which are sold to the people. It is for the Post-Office Department itself whose correspondence and mail matter, according to this bill, will amount to $986,000 a year.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I beg to say that it is exactly for that kind of postage on exactly that kind of correspondence for which the Senator pays himself out of his own pocket when it is addressed to him. It is correspondence relating, no doubt, to the public business going to the Postmaster-General, and the Postmaster-General in place of paying it with his own money from his own pocket, as the Senator from Ohio and the rest of us have to do, is to pay it from this million dollars which is to be appropriated from what the Senator from Louisiana calls the general Treasury.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not want the Postmaster-General to pay $986,000 out of his own pocket. I hope he has that much money; but I think if he was to pay it out of his own pocket, he would be a good deal poorer than he is now. That is not the thing; but it does strike me as a marvelous kind of economy. Here for postage-stamps, for making postage-stamps, is an appropriation of $986,000.

Mr. WEST. No; not making them.

Mr. THURMAN. Well, it is for stamps; they have to be made, and I should like to know how much of this is to pay for making them?

Mr. WEST. Nothing at all. In a previous part of the bill the Senator will find that some $35,000 is appropriated for the payment of all the postage-stamps that are printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly, we understand that what is true of this particular branch is true of all the other branches of the service, so that really instead of talking about the franking privilege being abolished it is restored to the Departments and all branches of the public service except as to members of Congress. That is what it is.

Mr. THURMAN. That is what I wanted to learn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is restored, as somebody said about lying, with a circumstance. It is restored by stamps which it costs the tax-payers a hundred or two hundred thousand dollars a year, taking all the Departments together, to print and engrave, and then a certain other sum for distribution, and so on.

Mr. WEST. The Senator is wrong; $35,000 is the amount.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I understand what I am talking about. The Senator says $35,000; he is reading the Post-Office report, I take it. Is he not?

Mr. WEST. Yes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Post-Office report says it costs $35,000 to print the Post-Office stamps. I think it does as much as that; but when you add the proper proportion of the salaries of clerks and other people who are employed in the performance of going through this stupendous sham you will get the Post-Office Department alone up to more than $50,000. When you put all the Departments together and all the clerk hire and incidental expense connected with engraving and printing and distributing these things, which are franks and nothing else, except in the fact that if a man steals one he can use it, which he could not very often do in the case of our franks, it is the franking privilege back again with an added expense to the people of more than a $100,000 a year. Of course everybody knows that the Treasury must pay the expense of sending out official documents from the Post-Office Department. Before we passed the law for the repeal of the franking privilege this was paid for, if you call it paying for it, by the Postmaster-General and his assistants named by law writing their names upon the packages that were to be sent, and their being carried in the mails without any additional charge except upon one or two routes perhaps where we paid by weight, but as a general rule without any cost. In a fit of great economy and retrenchment and reform we turned around and said: "No, we will not trust the Postmaster-General to write his name upon the packages that are to go, but he shall employ an engraver, who shall engrave a proper design, then he shall employ a printing establishment, and buy paper" peculiar in fiber for aught I know, "upon which shall be printed this design, and then he shall employ clerks to watch the engraver and the printer and see that they do not steal them, and then he shall employ some more clerks to gather these things together and put them in envelopes and send them all over the country by express or otherwise to everybody that is entitled to official postage," whoever that may be under this law, I do not know—sixty thousand postmasters perhaps or whatever the number may be, and so with every other board. The consequence of this economy and retrenchment and reform is that the people are saddled with one, two, or three hundred thousand dollars of additional tax for nothing at all except to increase the chances of fraud in sending documents out.

When my friend from Ohio who voted for this illustrious contrivance gets ready—as he says he is not now—to retrace his steps, I shall vote with him.

Mr. MORTON. I am somewhat—

Mr. WEST. Let me interrupt the Senator to ask what is the pending question. This debate is going on by common consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are considering the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is pending before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It is open to amendment.

Mr. MORTON. I am somewhat surprised at this discussion. I think I have understood before that both the Senators were in favor of abolishing the franking privilege. That was done. It was provided then in order to provide for the service of the Departments that they should have stamps of a peculiar kind that each Department could use, and appropriations were made to procure them. In point of fact, this money does not pass; it does not change hands; it is not taken out of the Treasury and the stamps paid for, but it is paid right back into the Treasury. This plan is adopted to avoid the abuse of what was termed the franking privilege, and this appropriation is simply a matter of form to carry out existing laws. If Senators are not satisfied with it, they ought to go for the restoration of that privilege which I think they voted to abolish.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move to strike out on page 7, lines 30 and 31 of section 2, and insert:

That all laws and clauses of laws repealing the franking privilege be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. WEST. Before that question is put I call for a division of the subject, first to strike out and next to insert.

Mr. THURMAN. That is against our rule.

Mr. WEST. Then I wish to say with reference to the appropriation in this bill of $986,000 for postage-stamps, which this amendment moves to strike out, that I find myself in the uncomfortable position of reporting a bill and supporting a proposition to appropriate money to carry out a law that was voted for by Senators who are now taking exception to making provision to carry it into effect. That is the fact. In reference to this $986,000, in place of its being a tax upon the Government it is merely transferring the money from the Treasury into the Post-Office and back to the Treasury; but such are the consequences of the law that Congress has imposed upon the statute-book.

Mr. STEVENSON. I differed with the Senator from Ohio in his vote on the abolition of the franking privilege, so called. I thought he was wrong then, and I think so now. I have always believed that the franking privilege was one of the essential elements of representative government; that the people who paid their taxes had a right to receive free of postage all that was said and all that was done in the two branches of Congress. I believed then as I believe now that it is the veriest humbug that ever was invented by a political party for political success. They told us it was an economical measure. There were Senators who then said that when you repealed that privilege you would have a deficiency bill of several millions. That prophecy is now historic. This bill contains a deficiency of $6,852,700, and that is not half the story. As one of the members of the Committee on Appropriations I say the deficiency is $8,000,000.

Did any such deficiencies follow when the franking privilege existed? Not at all; and now in this proposition we have not only extravagance, but we have waste. I undertake to say that while here is an item of $986,000 to furnish stamps to one Department, the same thing is done in regard to many others, and stamps are scattered through all the avenues of the various Departments. I have the authority of a republican Senator—I mean the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. LEWIS,] whom I do not see in my eye now—that official stamps have been used for political purposes. I am opposed to the whole business, and I shall never hear this question agitated and see this extravagance resorted to and the taxes on the people increased, without entering my protest against it. We had better go back to the old-fashioned system of the franking privilege. My friend from Ohio said it had been abused. What institution has not? If he will tell me one I shall be thankful to him. It will not do to say that because it has been abused you must abolish it. No, sir.

I am opposed to this appropriation because I think it is a waste of the public money. You can so restore the franking privilege as to limit it to the distribution of all documents published by Congress. In the post-office bill passed during the last session we attempted to let packages of all sorts be carried through the mail. You can send shoes or you can send pistols or you can send anything else. We have attempted to imitate England on that subject; but England regulates in regard to that matter the carriage by the distance. We have, however, agreed to carry packages, and we carry them from here to Baltimore for the same rate that we carry them from here to San Francisco. There is one of the fruitful causes of this deficiency. If the Post-Office Department is to be a public carrier of all sorts of matter, let us act with some reason and sense and regulate the charge according to the distance for which a package is carried. I am opposed to the whole proposition; I am for limiting the post-office to written and printed matter which legitimately belongs to it, and I am for excluding it from being a common public carrier, but if you make it so, charge according to distance.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the post-office is created for the public convenience; it performs a public service which is paid for by the people. Therefore as to whether there shall be a discrimination as to distance or not strikes me as being a very small matter because, after all, it is a public expense, and those who send from great distances will find the same convenience as those who send a shorter distance. There is no great importance in that.

But, Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this item of $986,000 for official postage-stamps for the Post-Office Department. If what the honorable Senator from Louisiana said was so, then there is no use whatever in such an appropriation. It is simply taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another. But on page 4, line 67, we discover that there are $149,764 appropriated "for the manufacture of adhesive stamps, including official stamps." The cost of the official stamps and the cost of the stamps which we all use in our private correspondence is alleged to be $149,764. If this be so, the Government pays this money for that as well as of course its stamps for the public from which it receives its revenue. What can be the necessity for appropriating $986,000 or making any note of it whatever, when the stamps have been already paid for, when they are in the Post-Office Department, and when the Government is simply taking the money out of one pocket and putting it back in the other? It seems to me that lines 30 and 31 on page 7 are entirely superfluous. You have authorized on page 4 the manufacture of these official stamps just as many as the Department needs. Now if you authorize their manufacture and their use, where is the sense, where is the use in any way of appropriating money to another Department or rather which shall be paid by the Post-Office Department into the Treasury Department for the use of these very stamps? There certainly is no restriction upon the amount used. It would be precisely as though you authorized these parties, the officials of the Post-Office Department, to stamp or frank by manual impression their various documents, and then afterward estimated their postage at so much money and appropriated $986,000 to pay for it.

What is an official postage-stamp? Nothing in the world but a frank of the Government. The franks formerly used by members of Congress were their signs-manual. The stamp used by the Government is its frank. You put the frank on a book or letter or whatever may be the document passed free through the mail. Here you have provided for these Government franks called "official stamps," which are to be put on, which cost some thousands of dollars; I do not know precisely how much because the adhesive postage-stamps and the official stamps are all combined in one item of $149,764. It seems to me that this bill is filled with the most magnificent figures. There is, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STEVENSON] noted just now, an appropriation for a deficiency of $6,852,705, and this is on the heels of the proclamation of the Postmaster-General preceding the present that if we would only abolish this terrible franking privilege the Post-Office Department would become a self-sustaining institution. Every year the deficiency has grown greater and greater. So far from the expense of the Department decreasing, it has simply increased, and I must say that I see no use whatever, but on the contrary a possibility of harm, in the presence of this $986,000 for stamps which have already been paid for by a previous section of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, as I understand the words in the bill which the Senator from South Carolina moves to strike out, I shall vote to strike them out. I shall so vote, not as a retraction of my vote to abolish the so-called franking privilege, but in harmony and continuation of the spirit and letter of that vote. Why did we abolish the franking privilege? To correct abuses, some said, the statement of which abuses, in my belief, was grossly exaggerated. Because, others said, all mail matter ought to pay its way through the mails, thereby meaning all mail matter external to the Department itself. Others said we shall cease to print books, itself a great cost, and to encumber the mails with them, and with garden-seeds, and cuttings, and so on. Such were the reasons which moved the two Houses of Congress to try the experiment of abolishing the miscalled franking privilege.

I shall not attempt, Mr. President, within five minutes to state the various respects in which these expectations have failed, but I come to this one: What is the significance and motive of this contrivance? It is to give popular advantage to the Post-Office Department; it is to make it in name and in false appearance self-sustaining. How? By carrying on a process and a machine costing, as the Senator from Vermont has explained, a great sum of money, a sum which would have been great in ancient times, all for the purpose as the Senator from Delaware has said of taking money out of one pocket and putting it into the other. It is a scheme of book-keeping by which the accounts of the Post-Office Department are magnified on the credit side to the end that they may contrast favorably with the accounts of other Departments. That is all there is of it. Now, why not say that the Post-Office Department may print its stamps and put on its stamps, and its correspondence being supposed to relate to the machinery of the postal service, that that imposition of stamps shall satisfy the law in that regard? What is the sense of appropriating money out of the general Treasury, as the Senator having charge of the bill was pleased to phrase it, to buy stamps and hire clerks to go through what the Senator from Vermont has related, including those clerks to whom he did not refer, who attempt to lick and paste these stamps in the Post-Office Department? This latter class of clerks might be unavoidable anyway to perform the mechanical work of attaching the stamps, but what is all this for?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would not an autograph be better still?

Mr. CONKLING. I agree with my honorable friend that an autograph would be better still, just as much as some instrument which is not negotiable by delivery, is a safer thing to transmit than a note payable to bearer or something which passes from hand to hand and which if lost is good in the hands of anybody. If the Postmaster-General had a stamp which would save him the trouble of writing his name, that stamp probably could not be stolen, and ordinary fidelity would guard against the impression which might be stolen; but here I agree with Senators in assuming that the other objection is the broad opportunity of pilfering these stamps.

I abstain from saying anything at this moment about the franking privilege. I voted to abolish it. I confess I have been disappointed in some respects as to the results of its abolition; but this is a question independent of that; and until I have further light, I will not vote to appropriate a greater sum of money in order to carry out a fictitious system, a contrivance of book-keeping, by which one Department is made to appear better in national accounts than the rest, the whole net result being sheer loss to the tax-payers of the country.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I wish to add to the words originally proposed to be inserted, so as to make my proposition more clear and distinct, the following:

And that the franking privilege, as it existed prior to the passage of the act abolishing the same, be, and it is hereby, re-established.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, I voted to abolish the franking privilege. I have never regretted the vote I cast. I made some observation at the time giving my reasons therefor. I have never seen a reason to change the views I then expressed.

There were two great difficulties in reference to the franking privilege. One was that it had been greatly abused, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] has explained again to the Senate this morning. Another difficulty was that it was a great incumbrance to the members of Congress, taking their time, which, if valuable at all, was valuable for better purposes than the mere work of a clerk. One of the greatest difficulties and one of my greatest objections to the continuation of the franking privilege, in addition to the way in which it was abused, in addition to the great habit which had grown up among the political parties and partisans of using it for party purposes, was that it was an incumbrance on members of Congress; that it took time which was more important to their constituents, and which they needed if they did their duty here in Congress. There seems to be no sense in employing the time of gentlemen of high character and ability to sit down as clerks and write their names on thousands and thousands of documents and thousands and thousands of speeches. When I came here I subscribed, I recollect very well, for five thousand copies of a speech of some friend that I wished to circulate, and I began to frank them. If you circulate your own speeches and the speeches of your friends in courtesy to them and frank all the public documents that are issued, as I did during the first year I was here, if you can do anything else you must labor night and day. Therefore there is no reason in restoring that

It was no privilege whatever. It was a nuisance, and was occupying the valuable time of public agents unnecessarily. That some proper plan would have been adopted and would have been suggested by the committee to take its place I think no one doubted when we voted to abolish the franking privilege.

If you print and publish at the expense of the county public documents, you must circulate them of course or they are of no value. The person required to do that need not be a member of Congress. You circulated the Congressional Globe by having a stamp put upon it, "free," by law, and the same man who put the envelope on put the stamp on. It need not be franked at all. Why was that never suggested with reference to other documents? Is there any reason whatever why the same party that puts on the envelope, the same party that binds up in a package the book that is to be sent, should not put a stamp on it to show that it is a public document printed by Congress for circulation? There is no necessity of this cumbrous system of stamps, I admit, not a particle; and there is no reason under heaven why all the public documents you print could not be circulated without expense, and why they cannot be identified to a reasonable certainty. The abuse of the system was such that there was no way of lopping it off but by cutting the tree down by its roots, and so I thought at the time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. If I understand the amendment of the honorable Senator from South Carolina, it is for the restoration of the franking privilege as it existed prior to its repeal, in all its length and in all its breadth. I voted against the abolition of the franking privilege at the time and was always opposed to its abolition, but at the same time I was in favor of a modification of its very great abuse. I shall vote against its restoration, and therefore I shall vote against the amendment of my honorable friend from South Carolina. I shall vote for any matured modification of a franking-privilege law. I can only illustrate it by stating that all documents should be sent out free, and we should qualify as well as we can the abuses that existed under the old system.

I merely desired to explain, and that is all I desire to do on this occasion, that as I always opposed the abolition of the franking privilege I am against its restoration unless it is restored in a manner by which its original abuses shall be obviated.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, as I do not believe the Senate is prepared to vote on the question of restoring the franking privilege and as the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina only opens the subject to illimitable debate, I think it my duty to move that it be laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. ROBERTSON. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 32, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Cameron, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Stockton, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, Flanagan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, McCree, Merrimon, Pease, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, and Tipton—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Boggy, Brownlow, Carpenter, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Hitchcock, Jones, Norwood, Patterson, Sprague, Stewart, and Wadleigh—16.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I have an amendment to offer to this bill. I offer as an additional section the following:

That the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall be carried in the mail free of postage.

That is not a proposition to revive any franking law that ever existed. By law the Congressional Globe, whether bound or unbound, passed free through the mail. There never was any necessity for franking it. The reason why it was made to pass free through the mail was that the people might know what their representatives here were doing. For that public consideration, in order that our constituents might know what we at Washington were doing, it has been the policy of the law to permit the record of our debates to pass free through the mails. I think that a wise policy. I have always voted, wherever I could get the opportunity, of separating this from the question of abolishing the franking privilege, in favor of the debates of Congress passing free through the mails; and last year or the year before that (I think it was at the last session) I moved a similar amendment to the post-office bill, and I believe it received a majority of the votes of the Senate, and was lost perhaps in the committee of conference. I now renew it, and I defend it upon the ground that our constituents not only have a right to know what we do here, but that it is our duty to let them know. There is no reason in my judgment applicable to this proposition that in the slightest degree is involved in the question of the franking privilege, for, I repeat, the debates of Congress formerly passed through under a law which made them free matter in the mail without any frank at all, and it is only that which I wish to see restored.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Ohio by adding thereto the following words:

And that all public documents already printed for the use of either House of Congress may pass free through the mail upon the frank of any member of the present Congress until the first day of December, A. D. 1875.

My motive in moving that amendment is the fact that when we made this reform there was already ordered to be printed a large number of public documents, useful and valuable to the people, intended for distribution. They have accumulated in our committee-rooms; and with the small amount of resources that I personally possess, I should have to go hungry in order to pay the postage upon them all to send them to my constituents. I think the public are entitled to have them, and I, by this amendment, propose that in every State the people shall have these documents which have already been printed and stored up for their use.

Mr. THURMAN. I am willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is accepted, and the question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio another amendment: after the words "CONGRESSIONAL RECORD" to insert "or any part thereof."

Mr. THURMAN. I yielded to that amendment, on the suggestion of the Senator from New York, when I offered the amendment before, and I believe it was one of the reasons why in the committee of conference the whole amendment was lost. I would have no objection to it myself, although the result of it was, as I say, that in less than twenty-four hours after it passed the Senate had specimens of the speech of a single member in a fragment of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD printed so as really to contain but that one speech. I did not see any great harm in that, but on the whole perhaps the antidote had as well go with the poison; and when the speech of my friend from Vermont in favor of high duties is sent abroad in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD it is a great deal better that some speech on our side showing the fallacy of that kind of reasoning should go along with it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I was not speaking so much for myself, but the Senator from Ohio makes so many speeches here that I think it is a pity that they should all be buried in oblivion. [Laughter.] He ought to have an opportunity to send some of them to his constituents, and unless he does send them I fear they will never receive them. Now if we are permitted to send a portion of the RECORD we should not be obliged to send the whole of a copy. A speech might be sent if the amendment which I propose be adopted. As the Senator does not accept it, I move the following amendment:

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or any part thereof, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General shall prescribe.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not accept, but I shall not resist if it is the sense of the Senate.

Mr. WEST. I thought the Senator from Ohio accepted both of the amendments.

Mr. THURMAN. No; I accepted the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS;] but I would like to know what the opinion of the Senate is on this one. I have no objection personally to it, but let us take a vote on it and see what is the sense of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the proposition so that it will read:

That the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or any part thereof, shall be carried through the mail free of postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

Mr. BAYARD. Did I not understand the Senator from Vermont to move "and all other public documents now printed?"

Mr. THURMAN. That has already been accepted. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] relates simply to the RECORD, if I understand it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It relates to any portion of the matter therein contained.

Mr. THURMAN. "The RECORD or any part thereof."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It enables speeches to be sent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or any portion of the matter therein contained, shall be carried in the mail free of postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe; and that public documents already printed for the use of either House of Congress may pass free through the mail upon the frank of any member of the present Congress until the 1st day of December, A. D. 1875.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio accept the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL?]

Mr. THURMAN. I do not accept it, although I have personally no objection to it. I think, instead of being "any portion of the matter" thereof, it should be "any part thereof," because otherwise it might be printed in some other newspaper and sent free.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I accept the suggestion, and will say "any part or extracts therefrom."

Mr. THURMAN. Not "extracts." Say "any parts thereof." That will do.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I accept that suggestion, and will say "any parts thereof."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to modify my amendment by inserting what ought to be in after the word "that" where it first occurs, the words "from and after the passage of this act." I do not know but that the amendment will speak from this time, but appropriation bills usually speak from a future time, and therefore to avoid all question I modify my amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right.

Mr. WEST. There is no objection to that.

Mr. OGLESBY. If I understand the object of the amendment to the appropriation bill now under consideration, it is to restore the franking privilege absolutely as to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. My understanding is that when the franking privilege was abolished neither the Congressional Globe nor the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD went through the mails free of postage. Everything, from the day the franking privilege was repealed, had paid upon it postage of some value or other. I will not stand in the way obtrusively or petulantly of the wishes of a majority of this House or of the other House if there is an honest desire to restore that privilege. I was not here in times when it was in use. I know but little of its value as a Senator. As a citizen I have had documents and speeches sent to me without postage. I accepted them cheerfully, and if my memory serves me right I accepted them intelligently. It was a law on the statute-book; but from some cause or other it became an odious law. Members of high standing in this body have said repeatedly that the reason the franking privilege was abolished was chiefly that the privilege had been abused. I think there is much force in that, as I thought a year ago there was much force in the justness of that statement.

Now, then, if it is thought wise to restore the franking privilege by reasoning from that view I will silently vote against its restoration. I will not put my opinions here against the maturer judgment and opinion of older and wiser members. I will silently vote against its restoration for two or three reasons. I live in the midst of a people who seemed glad when it was repealed. I have not heard one encouraging voice where I live for its restoration. Nobody has said he desired it to be revived. I have told the people where I live frankly that by the abolition of the franking privilege "Members of Congress cannot send to you Agricultural Reports, CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS, public documents, or speeches of members; it is too burdensome, too expensive; you lose something by it and we lose something by it." My understanding of the tone of public opinion is that they are willing to lose at their end of the swingle-tree if we lose at ours. Whenever they shall say that they want it restored, as it is their privilege and not ours, if I am correctly informed by the intelligent debates to which I have uniformly listened in this body—whenever our people tell us that they want their privilege back, I will vote for it so cheerfully that I shall astonish the whole of them; but until they say they want that privilege back, I will not be so obtrusive as to endeavor to force it upon them. I do not feel that they want it back.

Now, then, shall we send the RECORD free? How many copies shall I have to send free? Will this body give me as many as I ought to have? There are five hundred thousand voters in the State of Illinois; four hundred and fifty thousand of those voters can read, write, cipher, sing, and pray. How am I going to discriminate between those men? Shall I pick out a few of my favorite friends and send them the RECORD free and let the other fellows go without this legislative knowledge, or will this body give me enough to send to all of them? If you do, that will be fair. Then every fellow can have a whack at this thing, [laughter;] but if only a few are to have it and I am to select that few, I do not want to be bothered with the privilege.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. OGLESBY. I shall have to oppose the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, I have no idea of reviving the franking privilege at this time, nor at any other until the people call for it. I voted in favor of abolishing the franking privilege for the reason that at that time I thought public opinion required it; but the idea that the franking privilege has ever been abused is the merest moonshine. I appeal to every Senator present whether he has ever abused the franking privilege. I am not conscious at any time of ever abusing the franking privilege.

But, Mr. President, this question here is not to revive the franking privilege; it is merely to allow us to send off the lumber that was ordered and accumulated prior to the passage of the law which abolished the franking privilege, and, further than that, to send out the daily proceedings that are recorded in the RECORD free of postage. Most of these volumes will be sent to the public libraries of the country. In addition to that it allows Senators and Members of Congress to send copies of their speeches free of postage. I think that is very far from reviving the franking privilege. All of us know that the burden of sending out documents and of paying postage on letters is a very considerable one. But I do not desire to discuss this measure at length. It seems to me that it is eminently proper that we should at least have the privilege of doing so much, and it costs nothing whatever to the Government. All that the Government have ever gained in the world by this so much vaunted reform is what it has gained out of members of the House and the Senate in paying their postage.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have steadily opposed every attempt to get back to the use of the franking privilege by members of Congress and everybody else, in obedience to what we all assumed to be the public judgment against the exercise of that privilege, especially by members of Congress; but the history of legislation on this subject is very curious since the passage of the act abolishing the franking privilege in every Department of the Government, all of it tending one way, tending absolutely to the restoration of the franking privilege, and indicating that at no remote day that thing will be done.

In the first place let us look at what has been done already. The act for the repeal of the franking privilege was approved on the 31st of January, 1873. On the 3d of March, 1873, we passed an amendment to an appropriation bill by which we appropriated $1,800,000 to the several Departments of this Government in postages; that was the face value in stamps, to be distributed ad libitum by the heads of the Departments through the entire branches of the public service represented by those Departments; and it stands so to-day. We appropriated last year, too, $1,800,000 for these stamps which cost about $100,000.

Mr. BOUTWELL. May I ask the Senator if the appropriation to the Post-Office Department is not equal to the appropriation for all the other Departments of the Government?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very nearly or quite, I think.

Mr. BOUTWELL. How is that explained? Is the business of that Department larger than that of all the other Departments?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think in its active operations in the field of enterprise it is. It has about sixty thousand postmasters, and its agents are innumerable. Before the repeal of the franking privilege it was confined to the heads of Departments and certain Bureaus. What is the result now? What is done with these $1,800,000 worth of stamps? They are distributed through the Departments to every officer, sub-officer, and sub-agent throughout the entire service of these Departments, thereby giving the franking privilege to each one.

Mr. CRAGIN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. CRAGIN. To a resolution that I introduced in the Senate at the last session of Congress, the heads of Departments replied showing the number of officers to whom official stamps were sent to be used, amounting to about fifty thousand.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is only in confirmation of what I say, so that since the repeal of the franking privilege as a matter of fact it has come to pass by our subsequent legislation and by the interpretation of the Department that the privilege has really been extended more than 75 per cent. That has been the effect of it.

Mr. CRAGIN. More than a 1,000 per cent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That has been the effect of it and that is what it is to-day, and Congress has been getting back to it. We send a few Agricultural Reports and we send now the public documents. Take the Globe or the RECORD. Under the postal rates to send the seven volumes of the RECORD of last session would cost nearly five dollars postage, but we send it for ten cents a volume. We think its costs nothing, but your deficiency now is over $6,000,000 as represented by this bill. Suppose you add to that this $986,000 for stamps, and then say half a million more for stamps for the other Departments, and that makes the deficiency what? The difference between what you receive for these stamps and what they cost. The cost is about $100,000; and what do you receive? Nothing; but they represent in your revenues $1,800,000 at their face value, and they do not go into the deficiency on the face of the bill, but they should go into the deficiency, making your deficiency $8,000,000. That is one of the marvelous virtues of the abolition of the franking privilege, or not so much of that as of our subsequent legislation on the subject; and the whole of the legislation on the subject has been of that character, getting back by gradual stages.

I am opposed to all that sort of legislation upon this bill; and when we come to the conclusion that we had better restore the franking privilege, let us do it openly and frankly and above board, and until then let us stand by what we did.

One word more in regard to the accumulation of these documents. We knew that fact just as well when we passed the repealing bill as we do now. Let us adopt the English system so strongly recommended by the Committee on Printing, which had that whole subject under consideration last year; let the documents be distributed to the people who want them upon the payment of the cost. Any other principle than that, any gratuitous distribution, is in the nature of the case necessarily limited and partial and unjust.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Mr. President, I raise no issue with my distinguished friend from Maine as to the manner in which I shall vote on this question, because I propose to vote directly in opposition to his views; but that independence that he speaks of I admire and in-dorse. I voted myself for the abolition of the franking privilege under peculiar circumstances, under indeed a protest at the time. It was then announced that it was a republican measure and had been so declared at the Philadelphia convention, and I gave my vote to it believing, however, I was then voting directly against the interest of those whom I have the honor to represent, and against that of the nation at large. I believe so yet, and I believe now that the amendments suggested are at least in the proper direction.

Another thing prompts me to vote for this measure. It has been well said by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that we have many documents now which cannot be very well disposed of without depleting the pockets of members more deeply than there is a general disposition manifested to do. But I think there is no Senator here so blind to the wishes of the people as not to know that the people do desire the restoration of the franking privilege, because, though they have been admonished time and again by the refusal of their representatives in Congress to furnish them seeds, documents, and everything that they had been in the habit of receiving for many years, their letters still come, they come from all the granges of the Union, they come from the high and the low, they come from every direction, asking for these things. That admonishes us that they wish them. How are they to get them in the absence of that which is now likely to be accorded them, I hope, when the vote is had on this subject?

There is another thing that does not make this very objectionable to me. It brings us back to the old line of "back pay." I never have objected to that, but boldly stood up and defended it as a just measure at the time, and this is a just measure, and I favor it in all anxiety.

Mr. WRIGHT. I had not intended, Mr. President, to say a word upon any of the proposed amendments to this or any other appropriation bill, desirous as I am that we should have a vote upon them and dispose of these bills. I understand the proposition now before the Senate to be that the RECORD or any part of it, as also all documents heretofore printed by order of Congress, shall go free through the mails. Whether it be advisable to restore the franking privilege is a question upon which we differ. I voted to abolish the franking privilege, and I stand by that vote now, and I shall stand by it until I am satisfied that there is some demand for the restoration of that privilege. I know of no such demand, and I think it would be quite out of place on our part, when there is no demand for its restoration, no change of circumstances now as compared with the time when we abolished the franking privilege, that we should retrace our steps and restore such privilege. But, Mr. President, if prepared to do it I should do it, as the Senator from Maine says, boldly and as a whole, and would not undertake to do it by piecemeal. This is a proposition to restore it in part and as I believe that part which is least important to the people if it be important at all that it should be restored.

One of the complaints against the franking privilege has been that it has been abused in that speeches and anything and everything other than the information furnished by the documents of Congress were sent through the mail. Now adopt this proposed amendment to this bill, and it will be evaded every day. Parts of the RECORD may be sent through the mail and speeches clipped from the RECORD or taken from it can be sent by the thousand or the million throughout the country, and you would have the same complaint that you have had heretofore of the abuse of the franking privilege.

Then again the RECORD is by no means the most important matter that should be sent to the people. Many of our publications, in my judgment, the people desire a great deal more than they do the RECORD. Then again the RECORD itself in being sent through the mail is quite unimportant as compared with most of the matter that we publish and desire to send through the mail.

Therefore I am opposed to this amendment in the first place because there is no demand for the restoration of this privilege either in whole or in part. I am opposed to it because if there be a demand for its restoration, let us give it to the people as an entire and as a whole and do it in a bold, manly way, and say we are prepared to restore the franking privilege and not undertake to do it in part. In other words, I do not believe in having this entering-wedge, having this amendment passed and getting this much done in the way of restoring the franking privilege, and it thereby be claimed that we have done this much and therefore we shall do the rest. Until there is some demand, I think every Senator on this floor of all parties is prepared to say that we shall not restore the franking privilege.

Mr. WEST. In order not to waste any more time on this question, with a view of testing the sense of the Senate whether it is their desire to restore the franking privilege even in the qualified form that the Senator from Vermont proposes, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. SARGENT and others called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Davis, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Oglesby, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Washburn, West, and Wright—23.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggs, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Pease, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Windom—34.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Anthony, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Clayton, Conkling, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Harvey, Logan, Norwood, Patterson, Spencer, and Wadleigh—16.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MORTON. I voted to lay the amendment on the table because I regard it as deceptive. If I am to have the name of enjoying the franking privilege I want it to be in substance and not merely in form. Now let me call the attention of my friend from Vermont to the phraseology of this amendment:

That from and after the passage of this act the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or any part thereof shall be carried in the mail free of postage.

Then does my friend understand that, if he makes a speech here and he orders five thousand copies of that speech to be printed and the words "CONGRESSIONAL RECORD" are over the top of it, that makes it the official CONGRESSIONAL RECORD within the meaning of the law? Certainly not. The Attorney-General would certainly decide that that is not the official record. You cannot take a single speech and print it under that name and have it go free by calling it the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD? The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is an official paper designed for certain purposes and having certain characteristics, and I have no right to mutilate it by striking out everything else but my speech and send that out as the official paper. Most certainly the speech of the Senator, although labeled "CONGRESSIONAL RECORD," would not pass as such. Therefore he could not send his speech free under the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me, I do not know but that his criticism is correct, but it was suggested all about me that speeches would be allowed under the term "parts thereof;" but to obviate any difficulty on that score, I will modify my proposed amendment so as to say "or speeches or reports therein contained."

Mr. MORTON. Then let us see how it would read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will read the amendment as modified.

Mr. STOCKTON. I have an amendment to offer as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MORTON. Let us hear the pending amendment first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is to strike out all after the word "That" and insert:

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and all other public documents printed by Congress for distribution shall pass free through the mails under regulations to be made by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. STOCKTON. I voted not to lay upon the table the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio if I cannot get something which seems to me to be more proper. My difficulty, as I have always said, was not that the public documents should not be printed and if printed circulated free, but that I did not like the franks. It was not a proper way to circulate them. That is admitted by the suggestion in this proposition that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall go free. If the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall go free without any frank of a member of Congress, why in the same proposition may not documents published in the same way under authority of Congress go without the frank of a member?

The amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, which is now a part of the original proposition, largely extends it. My amendment goes further, and it relates not only to the documents and RECORD of the present Congress, but becomes a permanent law until repealed. So it makes the law that, under regulations such as the Postmaster-General may prescribe to identify the book as being a public document, all documents which we publish for distribution shall go free to the people. If it be correct in reference to the RECORD, it is certainly correct in reference to the Agricultural Report. You can draw no distinction. They are published in the same way, for the same purpose—the purpose of distribution; and I can see no reason why a member of Congress should be required to put his name on the back of either.

It has been said by some gentleman on the other side that when they wish to restore the franking privilege they propose to meet the question boldly. I confess that I do not understand the meaning of such language as that, "to meet it boldly." Do they not meet everything boldly here? Is there anybody here afraid to meet this or any other question? I think not. I am sure Senators did not mean that. I meet it boldly, and have from the beginning, stating that you publish more documents than are necessary; you publish some that are useless; but such documents as the people desire published and that you do publish you ought to send free through the mail, and you ought to send them in some other way than requiring members of Congress to write their names on the envelopes, which is liable to abuse and at the same time an annoyance to members, taking up valuable time.

I trust that I have satisfied the gentlemen of the Senate that if the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is correct, the same principle should make them go so far as the amendment which I have offered as a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. STOCKTON.]

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Several SENATORS. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "that" and insert in lieu:

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and all other public documents printed by Congress for distribution, shall pass free through the mails, under regulations to be made by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move to strike out the words "for distribution" because we have not settled that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be an amendment in the third degree, and not in order.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I appeal to the Senator from New Jersey whether he is willing to strike out the words "for distribution" as we have not been publishing documents for distribution.

Mr. STOCKTON. I have no objection. If the Senator thinks it better to leave out those words, I submit to his superior judgment. My idea was to exclude those documents which we print for our own use. We publish some documents for the purpose of circulation, such as the Agricultural Report; and the reason for specifying the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is that it cannot be said that it is printed for distribution, I suppose, in the proper sense, and so that is mentioned by name.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Since the repeal of the franking privilege we have only published a limited number of documents, not for general distribution as before. Now this would seem to revive the idea that we are to continue the publication of documents for general distribution.

Mr. STOCKTON. I accept the suggestion of the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the proposition be read as it now stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment, as modified, will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and all other public documents printed by Congress, shall pass free through the mails, under regulations to be made by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the nature of an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it takes the place of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. That goes a good deal further than the amendment of the Senator from Ohio; and it is proposed by a Senator who, if I understood him, was opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. STOCKTON. The Senator entirely misunderstood me. I voted not to lay it on the table, and I said that if my amendment did not prevail I should vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am obliged to the Senator for the correction. I am very much afraid if this amendment is agreed to, which looks to the future in respect of the distribution (although that word is not now in the amendment to the amendment) of public documents, we shall fail altogether either here or in conference in getting this just measure of sending to the people the documents that have already been printed under pre-existing laws; and therefore in order to test the sense of the Senate upon that, I move to lay this amendment to the amendment upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey on the table.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I rise to make an inquiry. Does not that carry the first amendment with it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; it does not. It only takes itself under the present rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. DAVIS. Now I should like to inquire of the Chair if the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is laid on the table, does it not take the amendment of the Senator from Ohio with it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not.

Mr. SARGENT. With deference to the Chair, I appeal from that decision. It may embarrass us very much hereafter. I do not think it carries the bill on the table, but it carries the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The motion was only made to apply to the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. SARGENT. I do appeal from the decision of the Chair, which I understand to be this: An amendment being pending and then an amendment being offered to that amendment, that a motion carrying to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table does not carry the original amendment on the table. From that decision I appeal.

Mr. WEST. I trust the Senator will withdraw that appeal or at least hear the explanation of the Chair. The Senator is manifestly mistaken, I think.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know this matter is not debatable, because it occurs on a motion to lay on the table; but by unanimous consent I wish to say one word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Vermont proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rule on appropriation bills agreed to for them is that you may move to lay amendments on the table without carrying the bill. Now, an amendment to an amendment is an amendment to the bill; only it is an amendment in the second degree. That is all there is to it. Therefore in my opinion the decision of the Chair was clearly right.

I apologize for taking a single moment to say this much.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SARGENT. The effect of laying an amendment to an amendment on the table would be, as the rule says, not to carry the bill with it, but there is nothing in the rule which says that the ordinary parliamentary rule that laying an amendment to an amendment on the table shall carry the amendment with it does not prevail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the Senator read any such rule.

Mr. SARGENT. The general parliamentary law is when an amendment is laid on the table that everything to which it should be attached shall go the table. Now the rule comes in and says that shall not be the effect upon the bill; the bill still may stand after laying an amendment to an amendment on the table, but it carries the amendment to the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. SARGENT. I think this is an important precedent, and I should like to have the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is the question of order whether laying an amendment to an amendment on the table carries the original proposition with it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that it does not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Chair is entirely right, because if the Chair is not right it defeats the whole object of this rule.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 40, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Boggs, Boreman, Boutwell, Conkling, Conover, Edmunds, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Johnston, Kelly, Logan, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Thurman, Tipton, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Lewis, Norwood, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Stevenson, and Stockton—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Cragin, Dorsey, Eaton, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Morrill of Maine, and Patterson—20.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to lay upon the table the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. STOCKTON,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Conkling, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Thurman, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggs, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Flanagan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Johnston, Jones, Kelly, McCreery, Norwood, Pease, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, and Tipton—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Boreman, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Cragin, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Hamlin, Lewis, Merrimon, Patterson, and Sprague—17.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CRAGIN. Let it be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. —. That from and after the passage of this act the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or any part thereof, or speeches or reports therein contained, shall be carried in the mail free of postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe; and that public documents already printed for the use of either House of Congress may pass free through the mail upon the frank of any member of the present House until the 1st day of December, A. D. 1875.

Mr. THURMAN. The words just after "or any part thereof" are not properly in that amendment. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] moved to add the words "or any part thereof" after the words "CONGRESSIONAL RECORD," and his amendment was adopted by a vote of the Senate. It was not accepted by me. After that I understand that he modified his amendment. That he could not do.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Then I move to add the words, coming in after "parts thereof," "speeches or reports therein contained."

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator now makes that motion?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. I think that amendment had better not prevail. It had better stand as the Senate put it at first, "the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or any part thereof;" otherwise it seems to me it may give rise to a good deal of trouble.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to ask my friend from Ohio if it does not mean just the thing his amendment means without it. It relieves it from a difficulty of construction. I remember remarking that his former amendment would probably not include speeches, but some Senator replied, "O, yes, it will." Now, if it will, this is not necessary; but as there is strong doubt in the minds of many Senators, it seems to me that the explanatory words ought to go in.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. My only purpose was to relieve the amendment from any ambiguity on the part of any Senator. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio if he does not understand that the amendment would mean precisely what it is without the addition I now propose.

Mr. THURMAN. Personally I should have no objection, for I have no objection in the world to any Senator's constituents knowing what he has said here. I think they have a right to know it. I think it is for the public interest that they should know it. I think they want to know it. I think therefore that the same reason which has dictated the legislation on this subject for now about fifty years since we first began to publish official reports of the proceedings of Congress, that they should go through the mails free in order that the people might know what their Representatives were doing here, will apply to the case of a single speech, and yet I am not certain but that the amendment of the Senator will be liable to a misunderstanding. However, it is for the Senator to say.

Mr. PEASE. I should like to suggest that it seems to me it would cover the whole ground of the Senator from Ohio if his amendment were amended so as to read "any reprint thereof."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the pending amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "thereof" it is proposed to insert the words "or speeches or reports therein contained."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as amended.

Mr. SARGENT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 40, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bayard, Boggy, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norwood, Pease, Ransom, Robertson, Sanfords, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Windom—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Boutwell, Chandler, Conkling, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, McCreery, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, and Wright—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Boreman, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Logan, Patterson, Sprague, and Stewart—12.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer two or three amendments which I believe will all be acceptable to the Committee on Appropriations. These amendments are all in harmony with the bill and I have no doubt will receive their approbation. At the end of section 4 I move to insert—

And the accounts passed upon by said Auditor shall on and after the 1st day of July, 1875, be supervised by the First Comptroller of the Treasury in the same manner and to the same extent as the accounts passed upon by the other Auditors are supervised by the Comptrollers of the Treasury; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer from the office of said Auditor to the office of the First Comptroller sufficient clerical force to carry this provision into execution. On and after that day all moneys received for or connected with postal services shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and shall be disbursed in the same mode and manner as other expenditures for the public service.

In connection with the same amendment, I move to strike out "sixth" in line 1; so as to read:

That hereafter the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department.

That is his legal name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification will be made, if there be no objection. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment is reported by the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and is intended simply to subject the auditing of accounts by the Sixth Auditor to the same supervision as other accounts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer an additional section to the bill which I think will meet with the assent of every one:

SECTION —. That the Postmaster-General shall cause full inquiry and investigation to be made into all branches of the expenditure of the Post-Office Department, with a view to reduce such expenditures as nearly as practicable to the postal receipts; and with that purpose he shall report to the first session of the next Congress such a rate of compensation for postmasters and other employees of that Department as will reduce such compensation to a rate not exceeding that paid for equal service in private employment, and to limit the number of clerks and employees, and to reduce the number of free-delivery cities and the compensation of postal carriers and transportation companies; and that he also report a rate of postage on printed matter and packages approaching the actual cost of their transportation and delivery, together with such practical measures as will in his opinion tend to make the Post-Office Department self-sustaining.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio to leave out the words "approaching the cost." I do not know any reason why we should carry packages at an approach to the cost.

Mr. SHERMAN. We do not now get one-fourth of the cost of carrying printed matter.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is approaching the cost.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, strike out that word. I will not stand upon words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. WEST. There is a scope about this amendment that certainly ought to require the consideration of the Senate. It ought to have been offered, so that we could have had some opportunity to know what it means. It is a general and large instruction to the Postmaster-General to so adjust his expenditures as to meet his receipts, and then stipulates the direction in which he shall do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. It is a mere investigation which we direct the Postmaster-General, with ample opportunities, to make. It does not adopt anything. Everything has to be reported to the next session of Congress. I desire, as I am up, to say a word in regard to this amendment.

There has been a continuous, growing complaint about the constant enlargement of the deficiency in the postal service. It is manifest that at the late period of the session when the post-office bill comes to us we have no opportunity to discuss a proposed reform. I believe the Postmaster-General is seriously in earnest in a desire to bring about, if possible, all the reforms practicable in the Post-Office Department. This section simply instructs him and supports him in the effort to make this investigation. It is not binding or final upon any one. It points out the general scope and line of the investigation he will make, and he is to report at the next session of Congress, when the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will have this information laid before them, and they can then adopt such of these reforms as may be deemed wise and proper.

The reforms stated here are suggested in very general terms; first in the rate of payment made to postmasters, which is in many cases excessive and perhaps in some cases is under the proper rates. It also directs his attention to the extension of the free postal delivery system, now extended to small towns comparatively. It also directs his attention to other branches of the postal service where undoubtedly large expenditures are incurred, and where the expenditures have been largely increased.

It may not amount to anything; it may be like many investigations instituted by committees of Congress; but as it costs nothing, as it is in the right direction, why not agree to it? The Postmaster-General I believe will look to these reforms; but at all events, I think it is but right for us to direct him to do so. I believe it will result in good, and it certainly can do no harm.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I see no objection to the amendment except this: I think so much as expresses to the Postmaster-General the idea that the Post-Office Department ought to be self-sustaining is an error, because it may lead the Postmaster-General to refuse to afford facilities to new settlements, which is a matter of the first importance, and which tends to settle the country, increases our tax receipts, and benefits the country in its finances. I would be in favor of the amendment with that idea expurgated.

Mr. MORTON. I do not believe that the post-office system can be adjusted successfully upon the idea of making it self-sustaining. I think the Postmaster-General has authority now to do all that he is authorized by this section to do. He has the right to make all these suggestions in his next report and present them for our consideration without this authority. Therefore I can see no necessity for the section.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I desire to say is that if the Postmaster-General cannot report to us such amendments as will make the Post-Office Department self-sustaining, this does not require him to do so, except so far as is practicable.

In regard to the power of the Postmaster-General to report to the President, there is no question now about that; but this amendment calls upon the Postmaster-General to report directly to Congress, and under this section he no doubt will feel it his duty as a public officer to give to the subject a more critical and thorough examination than he would do without such a provision of law. There can be no harm in it, because as a matter of course if Congress does not approve his suggestions of reform, they will fall to the ground; but they will give to us facts and material upon which we can act at the next session of Congress. I can see no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—yeas 26, nays 12.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have one more amendment. It was demonstrated by the Senator from New York and other Senators that the appropriation for stamps for the Post-Office Department is a mere fiction. I move to strike out lines 30 and 31 of section 2, on page 7, which is only increasing the deficiency to that amount; I will move to insert the amount in another place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is to strike out lines 30 and 31 of section 2 on page 7, as follows:

For official postage-stamps for the Post-Office Department, $986,000.

Mr. WEST. The object of the Senator as he asserts it is to move to insert those lines and that sum of money in another portion of the bill, but we cannot exactly understand whether he can succeed in inserting them after he has once succeeded in striking them out; and there is no object to my mind, having investigated the expenditures of the Department this entire winter, in the proposition of the Senator, because it does not show any more clearly what the deficiency of the post-office service is than leaving the lines to stand. It is estimated for as a deficiency, and if the Senator's proposition is to show the total expenditures of the Post-Office Department by including everything in the deficiency, he should go back to the legislative, executive, and judicial bill and take out the salary of the Postmaster-General and the $500,000 there appropriated for the support of the office here. He should also take the $500,000 that was appropriated for postage for the other Departments and take the $537,000 that is appropriated here for the China mail service and the other service, if that is his object; and that according to my judgment is the proper way to draw a post-office bill, to have every dollar in it that the Post-Office expends, and then you may see what your revenues are and what your deficiencies are; but under the present system of book-keeping in the Department this will only disarrange the system without benefit at all. That is my opinion after having scrutinized the expenditures of the Department as a member of a sub-committee on those expenditures pretty much the entire session.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is perfectly manifest that this will disarrange nothing. It simply abolishes a fiction. The Post-Office Department to be self-sustaining would have to receive as much as it paid out. Nobody expects that. We ought at least to be informed of what is the deficiency. We are told that deficiency is $6,852,000, but we know that is not the deficiency, because just before that there is an appropriation for the expenses of the postal service itself, that is its own postage, and that is a part of the deficiency. The Senator from New York stated it properly. It is a mere fiction. We ought not to be misled or deceived in matters of account. These $986,000 ought to be added to the deficiency, and there is no use in keeping up a separate account for this appropriation in the Treasury Department. It is a part of the deficiency and ought to be so entered. I propose therefore to reserve, instead of $6,852,000, $7,838,000 in the deficiency clause as a matter of account so that the bill will show the precise character of the transaction.

Mr. WEST. The Senator's motion is to strike out first. That I object to.

Mr. MORTON. I do not see the propriety of this motion. This provision simply carries out the existing requirements of law. The act which abolished the franking privilege declared that thenceforth all official correspondence of whatever nature and all other mailable matter "sent from or addressed to any officer of the Government or persons now authorized to frank such matter shall be chargeable with the same rates of postage as may be lawfully imposed upon like matter sent by or addressed to any other person." The law requires each Department now to pay its postage, and it must have an appropriation to do that just as it must for every other expense. It is true the money is paid back into the Treasury, but it must have an appropriation to do it just as for any other expense incurred in the Department. Therefore this provision is necessary to carry out that requirement of the law.

Why put it into the deficiency? Is it a deficiency? The deficiency consists simply of that amount which the receipts of the Post-Office Department falls short of its expenditures, and there is no propriety in adding this to the deficiency now. In so far as the whole receipts of the Post-Office Department come short of its expenditures, there is a deficiency. The deficiency does not depend upon this at all, but this provision is required by the law which says that each Department must pay its own postage, and it cannot do it unless it has an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. The answer to that is that by a subsequent law we have provided for official stamps; in other words, we have authorized them to frank their matter and have furnished them a mode of doing it. Instead of writing by hand, they paste on a stamp, so that this simply avoids the fiction that is now created by the use of official stamps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WEST. I ask for a division, and call the attention of the Senate to the fact that if the motion of the Senator from Ohio prevails, the Post-Office Department, from the 1st day of July, will be powerless to send out a single document on official business from its headquarters. That is the result and the absolute result of the Senator's motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. This very bill provides for the printing of those stamps, provides for paying for them, delivers them to the Postmaster-General, and declares that those stamps should pass the matter free. What is the use of keeping in this item merely to conceal the amount of postal deficiency? We ought to be brave enough to know exactly what it costs and how much the deficiency is. This is a mere act of covering up $968,000. This Department is furnished with official stamps; they are printed, and the whole expenditure is paid out of previous appropriations. What is the use of concealing nearly a million dollars of expenditure for the Post-Office Department under a separate account in the Treasury?

Mr. WEST. What is the use of concealing any of them?

Mr. SHERMAN. I would not conceal any.

Mr. WEST. The Senator talks about being brave enough. If anybody is able to read, he is brave enough to understand what this bill means. The Senator talks about concealing things. Why does he not put every dollar that is expended for the Post-Office Department in the deficiency? Why does he not put the Postmaster-General's salary and the $500,000 that is spent here to maintain the establishment, and the $500,000 that is appropriated to the other Departments, and the $500,000 that is appropriated to carry the China mail? Why does he not put all that in too?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will tell the reason: because those other appropriations made are of money which is paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. WEST. This money is to come out of the Treasury, and it goes to pay the expenses of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say that this money is not paid out at all; not a dollar of it.

Mr. WEST. The Senator is mistaken: it is paid out.

Mr. SHERMAN. It cannot be paid. To whom is it paid?

Mr. WEST. Paid to the men who carry the the mail. The $384,000 is paid to the men who carry the mail in lieu of other money that would be taken out of the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do we not know that the whole of it is merely in postage-stamps printed for the Post-Office Department and sent to the different postmasters and stuck on letters? Unless these official stamps are money, they are not paid out of the Treasury. It is a mere mode of keeping an account.

Mr. WEST. I will explain to the Senator, because if his statement were correct, he would be perfectly justified in what he does.

The $983,000 are drawn out of the Treasury by the Postmaster-General. Nine hundred and eighty-six thousand dollars are paid for transportation of the mails. That is the way; and when I used the expression it was taking it out of one pocket and putting it into the other, I merely meant that the Postmaster-General paid it out instead of the Treasury. The Senator misunderstands the proposition entirely. It is money taken from the Treasury, put into the Post-Office Department, and paid to the mail contractors.

Mr. SHERMAN. So it is, but it is money taken out of a deficiency of postal receipts. That is precisely what I say. I desire to add it to the aggregate of the deficiency. It is money paid out of the Treasury of the United States from other sources of income, not from the postal receipts. It is not received by the Post-Office Department, but is money taken out of the Treasury of the United States from money not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MORTON. It is all taken out of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 29, noes 10.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have a few amendments to offer.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will be necessary in the next line to insert an increased amount; I suppose the Clerk has that memorandum.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I suggest whether there should not be a provision in the amendment that the autograph of the Postmaster-General would be all that is required, and so save $35,000 that is paid for stamps.

Mr. SHERMAN. It would be cheaper, but I do not offer such an amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY. I offer the following as an additional section:

That section 8 of the act approved June 23, 1874, "making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875," be, and is hereby, amended as follows: Insert the words "twelve ounces" in lieu of the words "four pounds."

I will simply say in explanation of this amendment that it has been well considered by the committee and unanimously agreed to. A very liberal piece of legislation in the act of 1874 allowed samples of merchandise, and indeed all the items usually described as third-class matter, to go in the mail.

The act of 1874, section 8, says:

That all mailable matter of the third class referred to in section 133 of the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department," approved June 8, 1872, may weigh not exceeding four pounds for each package thereof.

Previous to this enactment this kind of matter was confined, excepting in one or two exceptional cases, to twelve ounces—three-fourths of a pound. That was found sufficiently liberal to accommodate all the various interests concerned in this matter. Congress enlarged it to four pounds, under which this kind of abuse is now rapidly growing up. Recently there came from the city of New York six hundred pounds of merchandise, sent on as samples of merchandise to Tucson, in Arizona, in four-pound packages, at eight cents a pound. That was evidently an abuse of the law, unquestionably contrary to the intention of Congress in its enactment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the net result in point of profit?

Mr. RAMSEY. Not very large, I imagine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much did we pay for carrying it?

Mr. RAMSEY. I cannot tell that, but the ordinary charge upon express matter passing over that route would be more than a dollar a pound.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But my inquiry of the Senator from Minnesota was to know what it cost the Post-Office Department to carry that for the price which it received.

Mr. RAMSEY. It costs them more in all probability.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator know that?

Mr. RAMSEY. It was grouped with other matter—letters and newspapers.

Mr. SCOTT. Permit me to ask the Senator whether there has not been recently a report on this subject from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, stating that this matter could be carried without any additional expense to the Post-Office Department?

Mr. RAMSEY. There was a written communication, which, in my great desire to get before Congress at once, on Friday last I had ordered to be printed; but it has not been returned from the printing-office. I am sorry it is not here. The Postmaster-General says the abuses of this kind are not yet very great, but they promise to be so in the future.

Mr. WEST. Does the Postmaster-General recommend what the Senator proposes?

Mr. RAMSEY. No; but the Postmaster-General does recommend that the increase of this kind of postage should be from eight to sixteen cents; from one cent for two ounces to a cent an ounce.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Why not propose that?

Mr. RAMSEY. Because in the judgment of the committee this is the best remedy, to return to the old law, long tried and approved.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question about this for information. I wish to know whether, on this route where these packages were carried, we pay by the pound for carrying the mail?

Mr. RAMSEY. No; it is a stage line.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we do not pay by the pound, then I wish to ask him whether we have not received more money for carrying these things than it cost us to carry them?

Mr. RAMSEY. Possibly so; but that was over thousands of miles of distance.

Mr. LOGAN. I know nothing of my own knowledge in reference to this matter; but on conversing with a gentleman in the Post-Office Department who has had more to do with it than anybody else, he seemed to think that it would be detrimental to the interests of the Post-Office Department to change this law; and not only that, but he said that the only advantage which could grow from it would be to express companies. I have had it stated to me by those persons who know, that the Post-Office Department get more money out of this carrying of packages than anything else except letter postage. That has been stated to me by a gentleman in the Post-Office Department who has control of this very matter.

Mr. RAMSEY. Undoubtedly the Government might make something out of it in transporting over railroad lines, but the great difficulty is when you pass off these upon the smaller lines, the sulky lines, and the horseback lines; it is impossible for them to carry this merchandise. If the example that I have cited is followed up, if you go into it so extensively you will break down the remote lines. There were six hundred pounds passing at one time all the way from New York to Tucson. They went down to San Diego by sea and were sent from there over six hundred miles of stage route over the great desert.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to ask the Senator, as he has looked into this subject, if it would not be a great deprivation to the settlements where there is no express running if we should alter this law and take away from the people this privilege which they have enjoyed. To the western settlements I think that great benefit of the postal system is to develop that part of the country, and consequently I was opposed to the intimation in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio that the Post-Office Department should be made self-sustaining. If this does cost something, it is a great advantage and facility to the people who settle there, and it encourages settlements and thus benefits the country financially.

Mr. RAMSEY. If the Senate would agree to carry our wheat from the West, we should be relieved of a great deal of difficulty.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That we are expecting to do in a day or two, as soon as the Committee on Transportation reports.

Mr. RAMSEY. Undoubtedly this legislation of 1874 was inconsiderate. There was no occasion to enlarge the package to four pounds; it weighs down the mail and introduces mere merchandise transportation that ought to take other routes. The committee thought the wiser plan was to return to the package of three-fourths of a pound, according to the system which had long prevailed. Previous to the code of 1872 this was the limit of that kind of transportation through the mail. It was the law there re-enacted, and continued so until the act of 1874, with a small exception of bulbs, seeds, &c., that it may be well for the Government to bear whatever loss there may be in transporting the better specimens over the country. They are still retained at the old standard.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question. How much did it cost the Government to take six hundred pounds of goods from New York to San Francisco?

Mr. RAMSEY. Probably several dollars a pound.

Mr. WEST. The Senator is mistaken. I have the data here.

Mr. RAMSEY. It certainly costs sixty-five dollars a pound from San Diego to Tucson.

Mr. WEST. I will just venture to say here that I have an official report from the War Department, in which the highest rate per pound through the whole territory of the United States on any freight is $8.96 a hundred, or a little less than nine cents a pound.

Mr. DORSEY. I want to say in reply to the Senator from Vermont and also the Senator from Pennsylvania that the superintendent of the railway mail service said to me that the cost of eight cents a pound was expended upon every five hundred miles that a pound was carried in the railway postal cars, and that on horseback and stage lines the cost would be three or four times that amount.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does he make that out?

Mr. DORSEY. He makes that out by reckoning the amount of mail that is carried over the stage lines and horseback routes and dividing that by the amount paid for the route.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But is that a fair test, let me ask the Senator?

Mr. DORSEY. I think so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Take a railroad—

Mr. DORSEY. On a railroad we pay by the pound.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much do we pay a pound?

Mr. DORSEY. I cannot say how much we pay a pound.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do we pay eight cents a pound for five hundred miles?

Mr. DORSEY. We pay fifty dollars a mile as a minimum price, and I do not know how much. In some cases $800 or $900 a mile is a maximum price.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Per pound?

Mr. DORSEY. No, sir; per mile of railroad per annum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I am asking the Senator over those routes on which we pay by the pound, as he says, or by weight—

Mr. DORSEY. There are no routes on which we pay by the pound.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understood the Senator to say that we paid by weight over some.

Mr. DORSEY. Not at all.

Mr. LOGAN. I talked with the superintendent of mail service myself on the subject, and I ask the Senator whether on any of the mail-routes that are traveled by coaches the Government pays by the pound at all?

Mr. DORSEY. Not at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We pay nobody by the pound.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course not; the contract for carrying the mail is by the week or month or the year, so much for carrying the mail; that is, everything that passes through the mail. The Senator from Arkansas says that passing over the distance of five hundred miles the cost is so much per pound.

Mr. DORSEY. The average.

Mr. LOGAN. Now I ask the Senator if it is not the fact that the packages spoken of do not average five hundred miles, but average three hundred miles?

Mr. DORSEY. I have not inquired into that.

Mr. LOGAN. I have; and the packages transported through the mails do not anywhere average five hundred miles. Hence the statement of the gentleman cuts no figure in the case, but the average is three hundred miles.

Mr. RAMSEY. Does the Senator say that they will only transport this kind of merchandise through the mails over the long lines?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir. I will explain that to the Senator.

Mr. DORSEY. I believe I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. DORSEY. The fact is that this law did not go into operation until the 1st of last July, and soon after that the large dry-goods merchants of New York, Boston, and other places began to advertise that they would send merchandise of all kinds, coats, hats, hardware, and every conceivable thing, through the mail at the price of eight cents a pound. When the Senator from Illinois says that the average transportation of this merchandise is only three hundred miles, he has ascertained a fact that I was not before aware of. My impression is that that is not true. My impression is that the merchandise transmitted through the mails is sent to the remote Territories and remote States of the interior where the rates of express are very high. For instance, take the case cited by the chairman of our committee where six hundred pounds of merchandise were sent, not to the people of Arizona, but sent to a merchant at Tucson in Arizona from the city of New York, first sent to San Francisco, then down the coast to San Diego, and then across the country five hundred and fifty miles to Tucson. From San Diego to Tucson the rate of expressage is sixty-five cents a pound. This matter was transmitted more than four thousand miles by the United States to a merchant doing business in Tucson. You can go into Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Washington Territory, all the remote places, and find, not the people bringing in this stuff, but merchants and traders bringing it in through the United States mail. If we are going to make a freight company of the Post-Office Department, I think the deficiency next year will be a great deal more than $6,000,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I have been trying to ascertain the true question that we have presented by this amendment; and it seems that under the existing law packages may be carried in the mails not exceeding four pounds in weight. It seems that the subject of the cost of carrying these to the Government has been under consideration in the Post-Office Department, and that there is a report upon the question which the chairman of the committee informs us has not yet been printed and we have it not before us.

Mr. RAMSEY. It is in the printing-office now.

Mr. SCOTT. This is a question in which the people of the country are very much interested on the one side, and I am inclined to think the express companies are very much interested in it upon the other. Unless this law has operated disastrously to the Government, we ought not to deprive the people of the benefit which they have received from having their packages carried through the mails; and if there is a report upon this important subject that has been sent in, we ought to have the benefit of it. I understand the result of the examination is that this regulation does not operate disastrously to the Government. It may operate disastrously to the express companies; but it is not our business to take care of them particularly; it is to take care of the Government and of the interests of the people, and I am inclined very much to think that this amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is a little premature in the absence of that information which we are entitled to have officially from the Post-Office Department. If this regulation does not at present operate injuriously,

I do not think we ought to change it; and until we may have that information before us in the form of the printed report, I am not willing to vote for the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to say one word in answer to the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas about the long distance to Tucson over the country that the six hundred pounds he speaks of were carried. There is a distinction that ought to be observed. The Senator speaks of a long reach, if we may use that term, to show that the Government cannot make money in carrying six hundred pounds in four-pound packages to Tucson from New York. There is one exceptional case upon which he expects the Senate to add this amendment to the bill because of that long reach, as it is termed in the language of the Post-Office Department. But take the number of packages sent to San Francisco, Tucson, or any other place in the United States, and then take the short reaches or short runs and average the whole, and the average of all the runs over all the roads in the United States where packages are carried is not three hundred miles. Further than that, the Government makes money on the short runs, and they are more numerous than the long runs. There is where the money is made, and a great deal of it. Taking all the runs together, the long runs and the short runs, there is more profit to the Post-Office Department in these packages than there is in any mail matter that passes through the mails of the United States save the letter mail only.

Mr. DORSEY. I wish to inquire whether the Senator believes that people sending for these short runs, as he calls them, four-pound packages will send them a distance where an express company will take them for less than eight cents a pound? I should like to know to what part of the country the express companies will not carry for less than eight cents a pound three hundred miles?

Mr. LOGAN. I know nothing about express companies, and do not care anything about them. I know that this is a benefit to the people and that the Post-Office Department makes a profit out of it. That is all there is in it. I know another thing. I have not read the report that the Senator from Minnesota refers to, that has been sent to the printer, but I think I know pretty much what is in it. I have conversed with the gentleman who draughted it, and my judgment is that the Post-Office Department, who have examined this question thoroughly, ought to know as much about it as this committee; and the Post-Office Department ask for no reduction on these four-pound packages. They insist on retaining the law as it is and ask for no such thing. If it was a disadvantage to the Government, an expense to the Government, they would be the first ones to ask to have it changed; but it is not.

I can cite the Senator instances where there is great benefit derived. Take the different forts in various parts of the country on the frontier where the poor soldier has to send for a pair of shoes or a hat, and he has to do it frequently between the time that the issues are made, for they are allowed only so many issues per annum. The Post-Office Department carries these packages to the soldiers all over the country cheaper than they can have them carried by the express companies. I have received numerous letters in reference to this very question from men situated in that way over the country and on the frontier in favor of this very system.

Mr. WEST. I think there has been sufficient time taken up in debate on this question, and sufficient of the sentiment of the Senate developed to warrant me in moving to lay the amendment upon the table.

Mr. THURMAN. I have nothing to say in the way of debate—

Mr. WEST. I have moved to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. THURMAN. I understand that; but I was about to make a motion which I have a right to make. I move that the Senate adjourn, (at five o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.)

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the amendment lie on the table.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 26, noes 29.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WEST. If I can get the attention of the Senate for a few moments—

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Is debate in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is not debatable.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Cameron, Clayton, Davis, Edmunds, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pease, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Tipton, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, and Wright—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggs, Boutwell, Chandler, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Johnston, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Schurz, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, and Windom—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Brownlow, Carpenter, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Jones, Kelly, Patterson, Sargent, and Stewart—13.

So the Senate refused to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. RAMSEY.]

Mr. WEST. If I can get the attention of the Senate a few minutes, I would like to explain the question. I doubt if many members of the Senate or of Congress are cognizant of the fact that this provision for carrying freight throughout the mails was established at the last session of Congress. At all events it attracted the attention of the Committee on Appropriations instantly on their assembling at the commencement of this session with a view to its abatement, because there did seem an inconsistency in carrying beans at eight cents a pound and intelligence at ninety-six cents. But we have discovered the fact that it contributes very materially to the accommodation of the people and that it is no detriment or extravagance to the Post-Office Department. Because a few mail contractors out in the remote regions of this country, who are obliged to carry six hundred pounds of mail on one day, or a few express companies with a profitable business in our more immediate vicinity, appeal to a committee here, that is not a basis for depriving the people of what is to them a great advantage and which the people all sustain. The people throughout the country have not appealed to Congress that this thing might be repealed, nor has the Postmaster-General. The Postmaster-General favors its continuance in his report. He says it is but an experiment, and I think until we have some discontent expressed against it in other quarters, it ought to stand. I really believe it is that kind of an experiment that probably we might eventually find occasion to repeal, but so far as it goes it is only a benefit, no expense, and is not complained of either by the people or by the Postmaster-General, and I do not think it ought to be changed.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, this is a very interesting question in itself. In one phase it is an inquiry where, under the power to establish post-offices and post-roads, we get the authority to do the business of common carriers. That is one phase of it which I merely throw out for people to think of, but it is an important and interesting question. There are other questions that will arise on this bill. One of them in the bill is of more importance yet. I allude to what is known as the Pacific Mail question.

There is in the bill a provision repealing the act and annulling the contract for the transportation of the Pacific mail. I have my own views as to the power of Congress, the right of Congress, to declare that contract annulled. I do not think it very probable that that will be gainsaid, but upon the question of the expediency of annulling it much may be said on both sides, and for one I wish to hear all that can be said.

Again, we are given to understand that a question will arise here in reference to the telegraph companies, that under what was once called the vagrant clause of the Constitution, the commercial clause, an attempt will be made to amend this bill so as to regulate the tariffs of telegraph companies. I do not know whether any such thing is in contemplation or not, but if it is, there is another great question. Unless we are prepared to deal with interests that involve millions, that involve fortunes of not only thousands but of tens or hundreds of thousands of people in this country, without debate, without information, at a late hour in the night, then I say that we ought now to adjourn and let these matters come up to-morrow and be dealt with in a considerate manner and with full information.

I appeal to the Senate that there has been no attempt to waste time on this bill, and I think I can safely say there will be no such attempt; but in view of the interests involved I do say it is the duty of the Senate to people whose whole fortunes are involved and are at stake in what we do that there shall be at least fair and deliberate consideration on all questions which arise before us. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 23, noes 30. So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. RAMSEY.]

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 27, noes 23.

Mr. PEASE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ.] If he were present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay." I am under relief, however, if there lacks a quorum, to vote as I please.

Mr. LOGAN. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. RAMSEY.] I would vote against the amendment, and he would vote for it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 34.

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Conkling, Conover, Davis, Dorsey, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Pratt, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, and Wadleigh—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Cameron, Clayton, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Lewis, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Robertson, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Tipton, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—34.

ABSENT—Messrs. Boggs, Boreman, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Gordon, Jones, Logan, Patterson, Ramsey, Ransom, Schurz, and Stewart—13.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALCORN. I move to insert as an additional section the following:

Sec. — That garden seeds distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture or by any member of Congress receiving seeds for distribution from said Department, together with Agricultural Reports emanating from that Bureau and so transmitted, shall, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General shall prescribe, pass through the mails free of charge.

A good deal has been said here with regard to facing the question broadly and squarely. I have not seen from the time the franking privilege was repealed up to the present time the evidence of that boldness and that courage of which Senators boast. The very first thing we did after we had repealed the franking privilege was to dodge, in a way that did not meet the approbation of the judgment of some Senators at least, the direct question, and by an evasion to bestow the franking privilege upon the various Departments of the Government, bestowing it, too, in a way that was very expensive and in a way that imposed no checks at all in favor of the Government, but in truth and in fact exposed the Government to impositions that had not before that time existed.

The Agricultural Bureau has a certain amount of stamps issued to it at each session of Congress, but it is a fact that that number of stamps issued to the Agricultural Department, as I am informed by the Commissioner, is not sufficient to distribute the seeds that flow into his Department for distribution. If a member of Congress desires seeds distributed to his constituents he must address a polite note to the Commissioner of Agriculture and ask him to send them, for the reason that a member of Congress himself is not permitted to do so without paying the expense. The Agricultural Department, however, under this bold front that the Senate presents upon this question, can stick on a lot of stamps voted by Congress and transmit the seeds for distribution free.

Now, Mr. President, I think the farmers of the country, the agricultural classes of the country, are entitled to have a distribution of these seeds. If not, I think we had better abolish the institution called the Agricultural Department, which becomes nothing else than a simple ornamentation to the city of Washington unless we put it to some practical purpose. There can be no practical purpose unless we distribute among the planters, the agriculturists of the country, whatever information may be collected here and whatever seeds may be collected here for distribution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ALCORN. I appeal in behalf of the agriculturists of the country that this amendment which I have offered may prevail.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This is a very common, familiar subject. The tariff upon seeds is very small any way. I do not think it is burdensome at all. I hope it will not be the sense of the Senate to adopt this amendment. I will not make a motion to lay it on the table, for I think it can hardly be the sense of the Senate to agree to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ALCORN.]

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 24, noes 21.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to submit the following amendment:

At the end of line 10 of section 1 on page 1, insert:
And the salary of the postmaster of the city of New York is hereby fixed at $8,000 per annum.

Mr. WEST. Was that referred to a committee?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly, and reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. I submit the following amendment to be inserted at the end of the bill, which I ask may be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Sec. — That every telegraph company maintaining telegraph lines among the several States, and extending into or through another State or States, for the transmission of correspondence by telegraph communications, for hire, shall receive all telegrams at any office thereof from any other telegraph company directed to any other office on the line of the receiving company, and transmit the same at its regular tariff rates established between such, and no company shall give any preference to any one connecting company over any other.

received by such company in respect to such business. It shall also establish a tariff of charges for all other telegrams among the States or with foreign nations, which shall be uniform to all for similar service and without discrimination.

Sec. — That all lines of telegraph are hereby established as post-roads, and all persons shall have the right to correspond by telegraph in the manner herein prescribed, and all such telegrams shall be privileged communications in law to the same extent that sealed letters now are; and the contents thereof shall not be divulged by any agent or officer of a telegraphic company except for the purpose of justice by order of a court of competent jurisdiction. All telegrams, excepting governmental dispatches, shall be transmitted in the order in which they are received, except telegrams directed by the sender to be transmitted between the hours of six o'clock in the afternoon and six o'clock in the forenoon.

Sec. — That every person who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this act, or willfully destroy, postpone, or delay the delivery of, or unlawfully divulge or permit to be seen by any other than the person to whom the same is addressed any telegram, or any part thereof, or give any duplicate or copy thereof to any other person, or who shall injure or destroy any property of any telegraphic company whose lines extend from one State into another, or shall willfully interfere with the operation, repair, or use of any line of telegraph, or any part thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon complaint to a United States commissioner or judge of a United States court, in behalf of the United States, shall be held for trial therefor, and upon conviction in the district or circuit court of the United States for the district where such offense shall have been committed, or where such person shall reside, may be fined not exceeding $1,000 or imprisoned for a term not exceeding two years, either or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I rise to a question of order. That amendment I do not believe can be received on this bill. It is legislation, and besides that it has never been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations nor recommended by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. DORSEY. I will say that a majority of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads instructed me to recommend this as an amendment to the appropriation bill. I did not see the Senator from Virginia in his seat at the time, but a majority of the committee authorized me to report it.

Mr. CONKLING. A majority of the committee consulted here on the floor?

Mr. DORSEY. In the committee and on the floor.

Mr. WEST. I venture to say that is immaterial. The Senator has a right to move the proposition individually. It is in order under our rules.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The amendment does not provide for any appropriation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia raise any point of order?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that as it contains no appropriation and has been recommended by a committee, this amendment is in order.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Do I understand that this amendment has been recommended by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so stated by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am a member of that committee, and never heard anything of the sort.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg to be allowed to make a suggestion to the Chair. I did not understand the Senator from Arkansas to state that this had been, as the rule and the law requires, recommended by the Post-Office Committee. On the contrary, I understood him to say that in looking for members of the committee he did not see the Senator from Virginia in his seat, and therefore did not consult him, which implied that members of the committee had been consulted on the floor, and that that was the action of the committee upon which the Senator was relying. I ventured myself then to inquire whether it was in committee or on the floor, and I understood the Senator to say that they were consulted a part of them in the committee-room and part of them on the floor.

Now, the Senator from Virginia having made this point of order, I venture to suggest to the Chair that the parliamentary law is, the rule is, and the ruling of the Senate has been, and in one case so recent that I think Senators have not forgotten it, that to be the report of a committee a proposition must have been acted upon by the committee as a committee at a meeting of the committee; and the late colleague of the Vice-President, Mr. Sumner, carried the rule a great deal further than that, and insisted that the action must be in the room of the committee, at the place where the committee customarily meets, of which I now say nothing. It is not enough that informal consultation has taken place on the floor and that a Senator can count up more than half of the Senators who, if they were in committee-room, would belong to the committee and who individually gave their assent.

Mr. President, I wish to make one other observation. We are now acting under the five-minute rule, and certainly the Senator from Ohio farthest from me [Mr. THURMAN] might have added weight to the remarks he made a few moments ago if he had included in his statement the fact that it is proposed now to enter upon a subject of this sort under a debate of five minutes, confined as to each Senator to a single observation. If this point of order be well taken, I hope the Chair will consider the more seriously owing to the fact that we are brought, if we are to be brought, to discuss this large subject under a five-minute rule, and at this hour of night, so late in the session.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the question which the Senator from New York has presented. I do not think it arises on this occasion. It is true this bill has been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and that it has been very fully considered there at several meetings. It is the report of the committee. It contains no appropriation whatever, and the Senator from Arkansas can offer it upon his own individual responsibility without being so requested by any committee; and then if there be any force in the argument that the bill has received the affirmative support of a committee it comes in just as well and with just as much force as though the committee had in its room directed it to be reported as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. CONKLING. Before the Senator proceeds will he allow me to ask one question of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FLANAGAN. I fear I may forget what I wish to say by that time.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to ask my friend from Maine what he meant by a remark he made, that we may understand it.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Very well.

Mr. CONKLING. I simply wanted to inquire whether the Senator from Maine meant that the Post-Office Committee had acted on this as an independent bill, or had acted on it favorably as an amendment to this bill. I did not understand his statement.

Mr. HAMLIN. As an independent bill, as the records of the body show, and the Senator from Arkansas can offer that as an amendment here, if it contains no appropriation.

Mr. CONKLING. That is another question.

Mr. FLANAGAN. In justification of the Senator who offered this amendment, as a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads I can say that we had this subject under discussion for a considerable period, and I myself was consulted before the amendment was reported. The Senator from Arkansas came to me sitting here and asked me if I had any objection, and I told him I had not. But the point I wish to submit is this, and remarkable it is that my distinguished friend from New York should forget it on this occasion, for I have never known him to forget anything here previously, that it has been but a few minutes since—I should like to have his attention; I want to see whether he is acting consistently or not—it has been but a few minutes since my friend came to me and asked me if I had any objection as one of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to an amendment being offered.

Mr. CONKLING. Was any point of order made?

Mr. FLANAGAN. That was done here, and I want to know by way of consistency if that may suit well in his case but not in this?

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will allow me to reply, as I believe no point of order was made upon it, as the Senator now instructs me I shall be a little careful of what I come to him to say privately at his desk.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I can speak publicly, because I was addressed in my chair just as I was in the other case, and I am showing if this is a matter of consistency, whether there is any here or not. I was approached by both friends and gave my consent willingly, expecting no point of order; and if there is a point of order sustained in one instance there should be in the other.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I have not had the pleasure of meeting that committee at its last two or three meetings for any extended time. Therefore whatever has been done in committee I was not present and was not cognizant of. I was not consulted in reference to offering this measure as an independent proposition. In fact I was not aware it had been reported from the committee. That arises perhaps from the fact that I had another committee which had the same hour to meet as the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SCOTT. I raise a point of order, for the purpose of correcting what I think is a misapprehension. I understand the Chair to have already decided the point of order that this amendment is in order. The debate is progressing for the purpose of ascertaining the action of the Post-Office Committee and not on the merits of the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The honorable Senator does me honor to call attention to that fact while I am discussing the question, after several other gentlemen have spoken whose remarks were in the same line.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Pennsylvania is mistaken in fact.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I state the fact as an independent proposition. I can well conceive that members of the committee might agree that the report should be made as an independent proposition and submit that question to the Senate when they would not be willing that it should come in as a measure to be appended to an appropriation bill.

Mr. DORSEY. Will the Senator from Delaware yield to me?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. DORSEY. I did say that I moved this amendment as coming from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and I think the Senator from Maine will remember that I had his permission. While I had the permission of a majority of the committee I offered it on my own responsibility and not on that of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY.]

Mr. MERRIMON. I am a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, but I was not consulted about moving this amendment to the post-office appropriation bill. I was in the committee at the time the majority of the committee agreed to report the bill to the Senate, but the minority voted against it, and I was of that minority. I will say now that I believe there is an evil that ought to be corrected if Congress has power to do it. Whether Congress has the power to do it, and how if it has the power to do it that power shall be exercised, is a very grave question that, it seems to me, ought not to be determined in a very thin Senate. I shall therefore, although I would be glad to join in remedying this evil in some way or other, be compelled to vote against the amendment if it shall be held to be in order, for the reason that we have not time to give the measure that consideration which it deserves.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator having charge of this bill intends to move to lay this amendment on the table, I am willing to give way to let him make that motion.

Mr. WEST. I thank you, sir, for the privilege; but I do not propose to do it.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I move the indefinite postponement of the bill, Mr. President. I do not propose to be limited to five minutes on a question like this.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. Now, Mr. President, what is it that we are asked to do?

Mr. NORWOOD. Will the Senator from Ohio yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORWOOD, (at six o'clock and twenty-one minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The question being put a division was called for, and the yeas were 26.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOWE, (when his name was called.) On this question of adjourning I am paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ.] If present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.] If present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. SCOTT. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] were paired with each other.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggs, Conover, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Boutwell, Cameron, Clayton, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Hitchcock, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Sargent, Scott, Spencer, Stewart, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Davis, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Gordon, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Lewis, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Schurz, Sherman, and Washburn—25.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I had no intimation until within the last half hour that an amendment of this kind would be offered. I am opposed to this amendment in its totality and in its detail. I have no more personal interest in it than any citizen of this Republic. I do not own, I never have owned one dollar in the stock of a telegraph company; and although I have no doubt there are citizens of Ohio who do own stock in such companies, I know not the name of any such citizen. I am therefore as indifferent in this matter as any man could well be. But I see in this proposition the assertion of a power that makes this Government supreme over every dollar's worth of property in the United States. I see in it the assertion of a power by Congress to mold and change and alter at the will of Congress, the charters granted by States, and upon which and on the faith of which millions upon millions of dollars have been invested by our citizens. I see in it one of the most dangerous strides of centralization and consolidation that has yet been taken in Congress, and I see in it an evidence of that spirit which threatens to confiscate everything with which some people in the country may not be satisfied or against which a clamor may be raised.

If I were to go into the details of this measure as I caught them when the amendment was read at the Clerk's desk, I might point out some of the very strange things contained in it; but I do not now wish to occupy the time of the Senate by a lengthy argument upon a subject so grave and important as this. I do not wish to speak—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Allow me a suggestion.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator let me finish? I do not wish to speak upon so great a question without due preparation. I do not wish to waste any time of the Senate either at this late period of the session or this late hour of the day by the extended discussion that must arise upon this measure if I persisted in the motion that I made but a little while ago. I therefore give notice that if the motion I now make shall not prevail, to lay the amendment on the table, then I will renew the motion to postpone the bill indefinitely, and we will see whether or not this subject can be voted into a law without any just consideration at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to postpone indefinitely is withdrawn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is most apparent that this proposition must lead to lengthy debate. It is equally apparent I think to any one who will examine it that it presents various points which are worthy of very serious consideration. And I doubt exceedingly whether there is any very considerable portion of the members of the Senate who feel themselves competent to act upon so grave a question as is presented in this measure. Glancing at it I see some features in it which commend themselves to me. There are other features which I do not think I could vote for under any circumstances. I do not know how it affects other minds, but as a general proposition there is nothing more pernicious in our legislation than to undertake to ingraft great public policies and public measures upon appropriation bills which necessarily come before us at such times and under such circumstances that it is impossible to give them that consideration which would commend them to the public at large. Therefore, Mr. President, I feel justified under all the circumstances in moving that the amendment lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. DORSEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I know nothing of the legal merits of the clause of the bill which proposes to repeal the subsidy granted to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; indeed I never read this clause until to-day. I believe the subject has been committed to the Judiciary Committee of this body, and it has made no report. I am perfectly aware of much that is scandalous and wrong that has appeared in testimony taken by the other House of Congress in connection with the original grant of the subsidy. I have never voted for a subsidy since I came into Congress, and unless my views materially change on that subject I never shall. At the same time I believe that by insisting upon the most scrupulous good faith on the part of the Government, I serve it and serve it well. I am not prepared to say that I can give my assent to the repeal of the act granting the subsidy, which will destroy a large corporate association, which must diminish the value of its property, and possibly ruin the fortune of most of those who are concerned in it, unless I know that there is good cause and legal ground for the proposed action of Congress. I cannot speak of my own knowledge of the fact, but I am informed that the stock of this corporate company has changed hands almost wholly since this subsidy was granted. It has, unfortunately for those concerned in the property, been too much the object of speculation and stock-gambling; but I am informed that the stock has changed hands and that the men who own the stock now did not own it at the time the subsidy was procured. If the men who owned it then and were participes criminis in obtaining this grant of subsidy through fraud and improper influence on members of Congress were still the owners, there would be a very natural equity that they should suffer; but let any man take the case of a friend who has acquired this stock innocently in the market through ignorance, as we here were all ignorant of the fraud by which it is alleged the subsidy was obtained, and then ask himself whether he should suffer for having embarked his capital under the faith of a law of this Government, which is suddenly, without warning to him, to be repealed? I confess that I am staggered by it. I would desire to know more of it before my vote should be given for it.

I have said very openly that I am no believer in the system of maintaining private enterprise by public subsidy. I think it a false system. But where the Congress has embarked in it, there is a plighted faith that it seems to me we should scrutinize our action very closely before we in any way depart from. I do not know what action the committee who have had this matter in charge propose, or whether they are prepared to recommend any. I should feel myself greatly relieved to be enlightened by such a report; but as it now stands, I cannot vote for this bill until I know better than I now know that I am not infringing that great necessity of every government, the preservation of its good faith to its citizens.

Mr. WEST. During the progress of the reading of this bill I stated to the Senate the action that was had on it by the Committee on Appropriations, that the committee directed me to report the bill back with that clause retained in it and without any expression of opinion of their own as to whether it should be retained or as to whether it should be expunged, for the reason that the question had been submitted to another committee who had more properly jurisdiction of it than the Committee on Appropriations, it being entirely a legal question; but there is no question now before the Senate.

Without indicating how I shall vote on the question, but with a view of giving this company the opportunity to be heard through the expression of opinion from a more proper committee, I move to strike out the clause relating to the Pacific Mail Company with a view of getting a vote of the Senate whether they will hear from a more appropriate committee than the Committee on Appropriations.

[Mr. MORTON addressed the Senate. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, reference has been made to the legal part of this subject having been committed to the Committee on the Judiciary, which has not reported. I think it due to the Senate to say that I have endeavored to have, I believe, three meetings upon the subject. We did have one, and had the subject under consideration; but we did not come to any formal decision upon it. I have tried to have two meetings since for the purpose of disposing of it, but through unfortunate circumstances, for which nobody in particular is to blame, I have been unable to get the committee together.

The question, as the Senator from Indiana has stated, may depend upon how this contract was procured; but that is not, as we understand the order of the Senate directing us to inquire, one topic upon which we are to proceed. We are directed merely to report whether the contract is legally binding. Of course it might involve an inquiry into the question whether it was procured by fraud. But the topic which we understood the Senate to desire our opinion on was upon the papers as they stood, supposing the act and the contract of 1872 to have been lawful and lawfully obtained, and whether from any circumstance that has since transpired in the contract not being fulfilled in respect of the time within which by the statute and the contract the vessels were to be furnished the United States are now under any obligation to proceed. If they are not under any legal obligation to proceed, then the question whether they ought to proceed or not might depend upon moral and other considerations, not depending necessarily on considerations of legal proof, and might depend on every Senator's judgment as to what public honor and good faith might require, and we might consider what the probabilities are about the fraudulent part of the affair, without being obliged to resort to strict legal evidence. If, on the other hand, the committee should be of opinion, and the Senate should, that this contract is now legally binding upon the Government in respect of its formality and in respect of its coincidence with the statute, then the question which the Senator has discussed would arise, whether it had been obtained by fraud. That the Senate will know just as much about when we report as they do now, for the reason that we do not propose to go into that question, and indeed have no means, as everybody knows, of making that investigation. On the other part of the question I trust we shall be prepared to report very soon; but under the circumstances I do not think it fit for me as one member of the committee to express any opinion or to vote upon this question at this moment either way.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to make an observation as to the considerations which controlled the Committee on Appropriations in its action. We made no recommendation whatever. The repealing clause having come from the House of Representatives adopted, and being aware that the House of Representatives had examined this question, the committee thought that perhaps a presumption obtained in favor of the action of the House, and so acted in part upon that presumption, but were controlled chiefly from the fact that it was within the knowledge of the committee that this subject in some of its relations, if not its chief relations, and as we understood in its chief relations, had been submitted to the legal organ of the Senate and was there under consideration.

Putting these two things together the Committee on Appropriations came to the conclusion that if they had the ability to examine it, they had been anticipated in any necessity for its examination, and that they might therefore properly report the same back to the Senate without any recommendation in regard to it for the action of the Senate under advisement of its legal organ, as we supposed by the time this bill would be called up for action the Senate would be advised. And as the organ of the committee I communicated the disposition of the committee to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, since which time of course we have known nothing about the action of his committee, but we did understand from time to time that they would consider the subject.

It seems to me it presents itself in this way: It is a pretty hard proposition for the Senate of the United States to act on this question unadvised; and at the same time it is a very difficult thing to delay any great length of time. If we could consider this bill complete except as to this item, then it might turn out that we might by general consent let it go over until to-morrow when I should have very great hope that the Judiciary Committee might advise as to what their judgment would be; or in the other event we might non-concur with the House and pass the bill without this clause and wait for the action of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary to advise the Senate as to what should be done and thus reach the committee of conference through that action of the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. How do you know that the House may not agree to the amendment, and so avoid a committee of conference?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is one of the possibilities; but we have amended the bill in so many particulars that I should hardly think it probable. I should be very glad to find that there was no question calling for a conference on this bill.

Mr. CONKLING. But I think there is a greater objection assuming that there will be a committee of conference than would arise otherwise. When the committee of conference reports, we must vote for the whole bill or against the whole bill on that report, and that would be a very bad way of getting at this isolated question. It seems to me that the suggestion the Senator made before might be satisfactory to the Senate; that is, to deem the bill complete as to everything else, and let this question stand over and the vote be taken on it to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I stated the alternative. I am not stating anything more than a suggestion to the Senate, and that with a view of relieving myself from the embarrassment which I really feel under from the way the Committee on Appropriations reported this back without any judgment of their own.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think there is great force in the remarks which have been made by the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Indiana. I do not remember that I ever voted for a subsidy; I did not for this; but the question which is presented to us is whether the faith of this nation is pledged toward that enterprise, and we ought to look at it free from any prejudice or from any fear of censure.

I do not think that the report of the Committee on the Judiciary will relieve this question, as my friend from Maine seems to think. There is no objection to stating that the legal question submitted is about this: The contract which was made required certain steamers to be furnished by October, 1873; they were not furnished by that time; they were afterward inspected according to the law by officers of the Navy and approved; and they were then sent to perform their duty at San Francisco. One question is: was time of the essence of that contract? The other question is: was the Post-Office Department so far the agent of the United States that their having these vessels inspected and sent to their destination after the time was a waiver of that contract not having been strictly performed in time?

These are the two questions; and my friend will see that even if they are decided in favor of the Government and against the company they are purely technical, and the question still recurs whether the faith of Government is pledged to carry out this enterprise, if not this contract.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not exactly agree with the Senator from New Jersey in his statement that the report of the Committee on the Judiciary upon this question may not relieve the Senate from difficulty and embarrassment in the consideration of the pending question. If the Postmaster-General had no right to make this contract, or, to state the question more properly, if that officer had no authority to extend the time or to dispense with the specifications of the two new vessels required by the law which authorized him to contract, certainly we are not bound to carry the contract out. No government can be bound by a void contract. I shall express no opinion on what the true construction of that law is. I remember, however, a case which occurred with this Government several years ago, where the Secretary of War gave the acceptances of the Government to certain contractors for Army supplies, and known as "the Floyd acceptances," which passed into the hands of innocent purchasers for value, and upon which, on the question of the power of a Department to bind the Government, the Supreme Court of the United States adjudged that those acceptances were void, although they were given for supplies furnished the Government and were in the hands of innocent purchasers, and by that decision, if I have been correctly informed, innocent purchasers in Boston and elsewhere lost a very large amount of money.

If the Postmaster-General was authorized to dispense with the time at which the law required these vessels to be furnished as not of the essence of the contract, then there would be a great deal in what the honorable Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has said. I will not as a member of the Judiciary Committee express an opinion at this time upon the conditions contained in the act as a limitation upon the power of the Post-Office Department. It is an important question and should be maturely considered. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] is a wise one, that we had better defer action until this question of the power of the Post-Office Department under the act has been reported upon by the Judiciary Committee.

If we defer action upon this clause of the bill until to-morrow, we shall probably have the report of the Judiciary Committee upon the only question submitted to them, whether time was of the essence of the contract in the law which authorized the contract. If it was, then I deny the authority of the Postmaster-General to waive any of its essential conditions. I am for a stern adherence by all the Departments of the Government to every requirement of law. It is the only safeguard for the disbursement of the money of the people. No Senator would go further than I would at all times to uphold the faith of this Government or to preserve intact its plighted faith in this fulfillment of its legal obligations. I will, however, never consent to authorize any Department of this Government to enter into any contract which the spirit and letter of the law did not authorize, and my sympathy for injured or innocent holders of void obligations, or for contractors under contracts with officers of the Government which the law did authorize to enter into, will never allow me to vote for the ratification of contracts not authorized by law. The Supreme Court has already settled that question, and I think the public safety requires the Senate to adhere to its adjudication. How far the Pacific Mail subsidy contract is within such an objection is a question upon which I withhold all expression of opinion at this time. If the Government is bound through the action of its authorized agent within the sphere of a clearly delegated authority, let us ratify it in despite of the fraud and bribery by which the law authorizing the contract was passed. If the Post-Office Department had no power to dispense with the requirements of the act authorizing this contract, then the Government is not bound, in despite of whoever may be injured thereby. It is an important question which should be considered by the Senate calmly and considerately in all its bearings, and I hope it will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have no objection to adopting the course suggested; but I did not suppose that anybody held that this was a void contract. I supposed that everybody would be of the opinion that we could hold the mail company to the performance of it and that the only question was whether it was a voidable contract.

Mr. SARGENT. I desire to say but a very few words indeed. I think it will be a very great misfortune to the country, for the commerce of the East as well as the West, if by a repeal of this contract the Pacific shall be left in the condition of tending toward a European mill-pond, as the Atlantic now is. Under the former legislation of Congress, which is not novel by any means, for it is simply an imitation of the policy of England and France, there has been an American commerce on the Pacific centering at San Francisco. That commerce has been extremely beneficial to the manufacturers of the East, as well as to us of the West, and perhaps more to the East up to this time than to us of the West. But it has given us a grasp on the Pacific Ocean; it has given us some domain there which we do not have on the Atlantic; and I think it would be an unmixed evil if this policy were reversed and we should lose the advantages which we have gained by the enterprise of American citizens and by the judicious encouragement of the Government.

Now I feel as other Senators I suppose feel, chagrined at the reports, I might say the evidence of corrupt attempts by the predecessors in the management of this company by which the effort was made to influence Congress, and certainly lobbyists were influenced, for passing the subsidy for the semi-monthly service. It has been a source of astonishment and sorrow to me, as I have observed the facts which were developed in the investigation. I condemn them as strongly as any man can; but after all is said and done about that, and after all has been said about the present corporation being the corporation which existed a few years ago, one thing is certain, that the managers of the corporation now are not those who managed it a few years ago, and that the interest of the American people is superior, its demands, its exigencies are greater than even the reprobation we ought to visit upon such conduct as distinguished this company or its representatives a few years ago. Sorrowful as I am that those things did take place, nevertheless I should be even more sorrowful to see this great American enterprise struck down, instead of fine steamships like the City of Peking and the City of Takao that may come into the harbor of San Francisco bearing the American flag, and going out laden with American merchandise, to see British or French steamships with their flag, and giving all the discriminations in favor of foreign commerce and against our own citizens.

I think, sir, that these are very important considerations, and they address themselves to the people of New York, of Philadelphia, of Boston, and of the whole Atlantic sea-coast. These considerations address themselves to the western cities, to Cincinnati, to Saint Louis, which get their teas cheaper now than they ever did before on account of the enterprise of this great American line. This is an American enterprise, and it ought to be sustained. If by any censure whatever Congress can visit its displeasure upon those who thought they could bribe it—whether they did or not I do not know—I should be inclined to let my censure fall there, but not at the expense of imperiling and destroying American interests in the Pacific.

Mr. THURMAN. I think after what has been said that every one must see the propriety, if there are no other amendments to offer to this bill, of agreeing to the suggestion made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The Judiciary Committee can meet to-morrow and make a report on the sole question referred to it by twelve o'clock, when this bill will come up again, and then the Senate can act advisedly. For one I am not aware of any amendment to be proposed to the bill. So far as I am concerned, speaking for myself alone and not knowing what other Senators may have discovered in the bill, I am perfectly content to agree to the proposition suggested by the Senator from Maine.

Now, before we come to a conclusion let me state to the Senate what the question will be on which the Judiciary Committee will report, if it meet to-morrow before the meeting of the Senate. In the first place, it can make no report on the question whether this subsidy was obtained by fraud. Let that be distinctly understood. It can make no report on that question, for not one particle of evidence upon that subject has been referred to that committee. The evidence upon that subject is not yet all taken in the House of Representatives, and no part of that which has been taken has been transmitted to the Senate or laid on our table or in any manner laid before the Committee on the Judiciary. Consequently we can pass no judgment whatsoever upon that question whether the subsidy was obtained by fraud, and much less therefore pass upon the legal question whether it is competent for the Government itself to set up that its legislation was the result of bribery and corruption. That, therefore, is out of the question.

In the next place, there is no question but that the contract made by the Postmaster-General was a perfectly valid contract. I say there is no question in the mind I think of any good lawyer; but perhaps I ought not to make so broad a statement as that, for the Solicitor-General of the United States has given an opinion that the contract made by the Postmaster-General exacted conditions beyond the requirements of the statute, in which I think Mr. Solicitor-General made the greatest blunder of his life.

Now what are the facts? Let me briefly state. In 1872 Congress passed what is called the subsidy act, that is for an additional monthly mail service across the Pacific Ocean at the rate of $500,000 per annum for ten years from the 1st of October, 1873, the service to be performed in iron vessels built of American material and of such a tonnage, and inspected by a board of naval officers and accepted upon their report by the Postmaster-General. I think no statute could be more specific. I think in the very clearest terms it required the service for the whole ten years to be performed in vessels such as were described in the act. In strict pursuance of that statute the Postmaster-General advertised for bids, for the statute required that, and never mentioned the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at all. The Pacific Company became the bidder, and the bid was awarded to it at the full amount specified in the act, half a million a year for ten years; and the contract was executed in strict pursuance of the act.

Before the 1st of October, 1873, it became apparent that the two ships necessary to perform that service and which were being built in the East would not be constructed in time, would not be ready by the 1st of October. Under those circumstances the Postmaster-General called upon the Attorney-General for an opinion whether the contract would be at an end, whether he could annul the contract on the 1st day of October, or whether he would be bound to accept the vessels if they passed the inspection of the naval board. The Solicitor-General gave an opinion that the contract would remain obligatory; that the Postmaster-General would have no right to annul it because of the failure to commence the service on the day named in the act, and the Attorney-General concurred in that opinion, or gave the same opinion for different reasons, and thereupon, the vessels having passed the inspection, the Postmaster-General accepted them and reported to Congress in December, 1873, his action upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SARGENT in the chair.) The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope I may be allowed to go on for two minutes longer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. THURMAN. Then the Postmaster-General having called the attention of Congress to the subject, a committee of this body, the Post-Office Committee, and another committee of the House of Representatives reported that the contract remained binding on the Government. Now the question is simply this: This company could not recover if the United States were suable in any court upon that contract, because it failed to perform the condition precedent, unless what took place afterward was a waiver by the Government of that performance; and that raises the question, first, had the Postmaster-General any power to waive performance; secondly, if he had not, is the non-action by Congress after the report of the facts made to it to be construed into a waiver and thereby to annul our right to set that contract aside or to declare it to be forfeited?

Now, I believe I have briefly stated, and I hope to the comprehension of every Senator, what are the real questions. We can report upon them by to-morrow at twelve o'clock, I am quite sure, if our chairman will call us together.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which he has already done.

Mr. THURMAN. And then it will be a question for the Senate to say, first, whether or not the performance of the condition precedent has been legally waived by the Government by competent authority, and secondly, if that question be answered in the negative, then whether the equities of the case are such that the Government ought not to insist on its right to annul the contract.

Mr. WEST. I am somewhat apprehensive that a further debate on this question may imperil the passage of this bill to-night, which I feel it my imperative duty to press. In conferring with the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Maine, he was not aware that I had made a motion to strike out the clause relating to this contract from the bill in order to bring the question within the jurisdiction of the appropriate committee, the Judiciary Committee, by twelve o'clock to-morrow. Were I to accept of the proposition from the Senator from Maine, it very likely might imperil the passage of this bill, whereas we can consider the subject entirely on its own merits, irrespective of the bill; and therefore I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there is a pending motion made by myself for that purpose to strike out the clause from the bill, and I am in hopes we can get a vote upon it.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, (at seven o'clock and seventeen minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion for a moment if he will.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Maryland moves that the Senate adjourn. Now, without any understanding, I am afraid his motive will fail; and therefore by his permission I should like to make any inquiry. Does any Senator wish to amend the bill or change it in any respect?

Mr. MERRIMON. It is my purpose to get in another amendment if I can do it. It will take but a moment.

Mr. CONKLING. Will it not suit the convenience of the Senator from North Carolina to offer his amendment now to the effect that we may complete the bill except in this one particular?

Mr. MERRIMON. I am not sure that it is competent, but if it is I wish to get it in. When the war broke out the Government was in arrears to many contractors in the South—

Mr. WEST. I must object to the Senator discussing an amendment until he offers it. There is no such amendment pending.

Mr. MERRIMON. I will send the amendment which I wish to offer to the Chair. I propose to insert the following:

To pay arrearages due to mail contractors for conveying the United States mail before the 1st of June, 1861, $372,000; and all laws and clauses of laws forbidding payment of the same are hereby repealed.

Mr. WEST. I raise the point of order that this is not in order under the thirtieth rule.

Mr. MERRIMON. I was in hopes there would not be any objection to it.

Mr. CONKLING. Has any committee reported it?

Mr. MERRIMON. If the Government ever intends to pay these men, they need the money now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CONKLING. I think I have the floor. I would like to inquire whether any other Senator has an amendment he wishes to offer to the bill. [A pause.] If no Senator has an amendment, then if we are not to vote to-night, of course it concerns the convenience of everybody—

Mr. BAYARD. That is subject in some degree to the report of the Committee on the Judiciary in regard to this section.

Mr. CONKLING. I think not; the Senator misapprehends me. I mean any amendment relating to other parts of the bill. I assume that there is no Senator who wishes to offer an amendment, and if the proposition made by the Senator from Maine can prevail and we consider the bill finished as to subjects other than this, I take it the committee will not resist a motion to adjourn and let it go over until twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to make one suggestion. Although we may consider the bill finished except as to this matter to be referred to the Judiciary Committee and await their report to-morrow, that in effect will be to extend this bill all over to-morrow and perhaps next day. I think we can hardly afford to do that. I want to know whether the chairman of the committee will consent to an adjournment now, leaving this bill unfinished?

Mr. CONKLING. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Indiana. Would there be any objection to concurring in the motion to strike out made by the Senator from Louisiana and allowing the bill to pass to-night, then entering a motion to reconsider at once the vote on this motion to strike out? That saves the point of the Senator from Indiana; the bill is passed except as to this item; and then if the Senate votes to reconsider, it will express its opinion upon that. That will be the sense of the Senate in that regard.

Mr. MORTON. I will agree to that.

Mr. CONKLING. Is there any objection to that, coming at the same thing in another form and avoiding the objection of the Senator from Indiana that we might go at large all over the bill in other respects to-morrow?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Does that restrict us in any degree in respect to this particular question?

Mr. CONKLING. Not in the slightest degree, as I understand. Let me state the proposition so that all Senators will understand it. It is that we allow this section to be in form stricken out now, and then pass the bill, and immediately enter a motion to reconsider the vote, that motion to be taken up to-morrow at twelve o'clock or at the end of the morning hour. That motion to reconsider brings up everything touching this subject; but the rest of the bill will be disposed of, and thus the objection of the Senator from Indiana would be obviated that some Senators might propose to go all over the bill and spread it over to-morrow.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. The trouble would be that some person might the moment the Senate meets or ten minutes afterward move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider and settle the question at once. There is a restraining power in that particular phase of the case.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator from Maryland suppose that if we were by unanimous consent to make the arrangement suggested, any Senator would move to lay it on the table or that if he would, a majority of the Senate would vote with him?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I do not know.

Mr. CONKLING. Does any trouble occur to the Senator from Connecticut, as I see he is interested?

Mr. EATON. No, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I do not see why we cannot do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana to strike out the clause.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If we consent to this proposition of the Senator from New York, we are all by implication to consider ourselves as having voted to strike out this clause.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all. This is allowed without dissent to pass in form. Then the motion to reconsider is entered. To-morrow at twelve o'clock that motion is taken up, and that opens the whole subject. No Senator is committed at all. It is merely a mode of closing the door as to the rest of the bill, and leaving this subject wide open.

Mr. THURMAN. Allow me to make a suggestion to the Senator from New York. It would not shut the door upon anything but this subject, except by agreement. Then by agreement we can agree that no other amendment to the bill shall be considered.

Mr. CONKLING. I have no objection to that, but some Senator suggested that that would leave it open to somebody to come in and go all over the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. No; it all stands in honorable agreement.

Mr. CONKLING. I agree with the Senator from Ohio. We want nothing but a mere agreement that the bill is disposed of in every regard except this, this to be taken up at twelve o'clock to-morrow and fairly considered under the five-minute rule which prevails, and the vote taken.

Several SENATORS. That is it.

Mr. STEWART. I understand that that is agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. That is agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair understand the agreement so as to state it to the Senate. The agreement is that the bill shall be considered concluded as to all matters except this paragraph from the eighteenth to the twenty-seventh line of section 2 as to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; that the bill, for the purpose of completing the action of the Senate on that paragraph, shall be taken up to-morrow at twelve o'clock, to be disposed of; and that no other amendment shall be in order. ["Yes!" "Yes!"]

Mr. WEST. I presume that that proposition will be followed by a motion to adjourn. Some Senators will understand when I call for the yeas and nays on that motion to adjourn, why I do it. I shall be compelled in charge of this bill to resist anything that carries it over until to-morrow, merely from a sense of duty which they will understand.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Before the motion to adjourn is made, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to Senate bill No. 736, on which a motion was presented for reconsideration some two or three weeks since. I want to give notice now that I shall appeal to the Senate, if I live, to-morrow directly after the morning business to take up and dispose of that question, which will require but two or three minutes. I shall earnestly urge it to-morrow.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I move now that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DORSEY. I want to say that in view of the statement made by the Senator from Louisiana, I shall not agree to what is alleged and seems to be a unanimous agreement, but to-morrow I shall have one or two amendments to offer to this bill. If you see fit to proceed to-night, I shall offer them to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair, if the agreement is binding on any Senator, it is on the Senator from Arkansas, because it was stated from the chair in his presence without objection.

Mr. DORSEY. I objected, but the Chair did not hear me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator object at that time?

Mr. DORSEY. I objected at that time.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator from Arkansas say that he rose in his place and audibly objected when the Chair stated the agreement to the Senate?

Mr. DORSEY. I endeavored to object, but I could not catch the ear of the Chair for the reason that half a dozen others were talking at the same time. The moment I could, I did so.

Mr. CONKLING. I can only say in confirmation of what the Chair has said that as I was a little interested in this I looked all about and I saw no Senator and heard no Senator object when the Chair announced it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to order. It is impossible for me now to know what the Senator from New York is saying, for I cannot hear him in the noise that prevails.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. What has become of my motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland gave way, as the Chair understood, to hear a remark made by the Senator from Arkansas. The Senator from Arkansas stated in making that remark that he had not been a party to the agreement by which the bill was disposed of, and that being somewhat interesting the Chair was still deferring action upon the motion of the Senator from Maryland in order that that might be settled.

Mr. MORTON. I want to make an inquiry of the Senator from Maryland. The five-minute rule would not apply in its terms to a motion to reconsider. Is there a unanimous understanding that it shall apply?

Mr. CONKLING. I want to suggest to my honorable friend that he has forgotten the agreement. The motion to reconsider is obviated. The bill is concluded except as to this one section, and that leaves it under the rule exactly where it is, there being no motion to reconsider.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To which the Senator from Arkansas objects.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Now I insist on my motion.

Mr. DORSEY. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. CONKLING. Then may I ask a question of the Chair? Am I right now in understanding that this bill is deemed completed and the amendments made in Committee of the Whole concurred in in the Senate, and everything done except what relates to this subject, and that that is open to be taken up at twelve o'clock to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that to be ordered by unanimous consent; and now the Senator from Maryland moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I decline to agree to anything being "ordered" by the Senate "by unanimous consent."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is agreed to by unanimous consent. Now the Senator from Maryland moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at seven o'clock and twenty-four minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

Mr. RANDALL called for the reading of the bill; and it was read. Mr. BANNING. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. STORM and Mr. RANDALL. It should go to the Judiciary Committee.

The question being taken on referring the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, there were—ayes 30, noes 26; no quorum voting.

Mr. BANNING. I assent to the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOWE also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, praying for such legislation as may enable persons entitled thereto to purchase certain lands, under the seventeenth article of the treaty of July 19, 1866, between the United States and the Cherokee Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

WILLOW SPRINGS DISTILLING COMPANY, OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4830) relating to the approval of bills in the Territory of Utah; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

DISAPPROVAL OF A TERRITORIAL ACT.

Mr. ARMSTRONG introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4831) to disapprove and annul a certain act of the territorial Legislature of Dakota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

DAKOTA AND BLACK HILL RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. ARMSTRONG also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4832) to incorporate the Dakota and Black Hill Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time.

Pending the reading of the bill the morning hour expired, and the bill went over.

LOUISIANA AFFAIRS.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the testimony taken by the Louisiana committee on both visits be printed for the use of the House.

There was no objection, and the motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. DURHAM. I rise to a privileged question, and ask for the reading of the one hundred and thirty-fourth rule. I also ask that that rule be enforced in this House.

The Clerk read as follows:

134. No persons except members of the Senate, their secretaries, heads of Departments, the President's private secretary, foreign ministers, the governor for the time being of any State, Senators and Representatives elect, judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the Court of Claims, and such persons as have by name received the thanks of Congress—March 15, 1867—shall be admitted within the Hall of the House of Representatives—March 19, 1860—or any of the rooms upon the same floor or leading into the same—March 2, 1865; provided that ex-members of Congress who are not interested in any claim pending before Congress, and shall so register themselves, may also be admitted within the Hall of the House; and no persons except those herein specified shall at any time be admitted to the floor of the House.—March 15, 1867.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Does not that apply also to the area and rear of this Hall.

The SPEAKER. It does; and it is made the special duty of the Doorkeeper to enforce this rule, and his attention is called to it by this reading.

Mr. DURHAM. It is utterly impossible to hear because of the noise and confusion back of the seats. I ask the rule be enforced.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back a bill (H. R. No. 4740) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with several amendments, and to move that the bill and amendments be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, made the special order for Thursday next after the reading of the Journal, and that the bill and amendments be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. I now turn the bill over to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RANDALL. The understanding is that all points of order are reserved.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill and amendments reported from the Committee on Appropriations, and that the bill as proposed to be amended be passed.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the reading of the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. SAWYER,] from the Committee on Commerce, moves that the rules be suspended and the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill and the amendments reported from the Committee on Appropriations thereto, and that the bill as it is proposed to be amended be passed.

Mr. COX. I hope the House will not follow any such bad precedent of last year.

Mr. POTTER. What is the gross amount of appropriations in the bill?

Mr. SAWYER. Six million dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the bill be read.

Mr. COX. We ought not to vote these appropriations without some understanding of their necessity.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the bill and amendments be read, so we may know what we are voting on.

The bill and amendments were read.

The question recurred on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. RANDALL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SAWYER and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 158, noes not counted.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not ask for a further count, as 158 is a majority of the whole House.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. BECK. I demand the yeas and nays on the suspension of the rules. If we pass this bill under a suspension of the rules, why should we not pass all other bills in the same way?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 150.

So (one-fifth voting in favor thereof) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COX. Is it in order to take up the other appropriation bills and move them as an amendment and pass them all in the same way?

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules is not amendable.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 207, nays 45, not voting 35; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Albright, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barnum, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Begole, Bell, Berry, Biery, Blount, Bradley, Bromberg, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

REMISSION OF TAXES.

Mr. WALDRON. I move that the rules be suspended to allow me to report from the Committee on Ways and Means and the House to pass a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and remit certain taxes and penalties claimed to be due from mining and other corporations in the sixth collection district of Michigan.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and release any claims for tax on circulation of evidences of indebtedness issued by any mining, manufacturing, or other corporation, except banks and bankers in the sixth collection district of Michigan, by such corporations paying the tax without the penalty that shall have accrued thereon since November 1, 1873; and declares that the provisions of section 3412 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be construed either in pending cases or otherwise in such district to apply to such evidences of indebtedness issued prior to the passage of this act, but said section shall be construed as applying to such evidences of indebtedness issued after the passage hereof.

Mr. WALDRON. This is recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means and also by the Secretary of the Treasury. I ask consent to have the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1875.

Sir: Referring to your letter of the 13th instant, relative to the proposed bill (H. R. 3530) for the relief of certain corporations and individuals in the sixth collection district of Michigan, I herewith inclose the draught of a substitute for that bill altered in some respects from that transmitted by you.

I am clearly of opinion that the bill as thus amended should become a law.

I am, very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. J. A. HUBBELL,
House of Representatives.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded, ayes 95, noes not counted.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill (H. R. No. 4533) was passed.

SALE OF TIMBER LANDS.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move that the rules be suspended and that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4149) for the sale of timber lands in the States of California and Oregon and in the Territories of the United States, and that it be passed with amendments.

The SPEAKER. While the gentleman from Michigan has the floor for the purpose he has intimated, the Chair will recognize some requests for unanimous consent.

J. W. DREW.

Mr. NESMITH. I ask that by unanimous consent the bill (S. No. 1065) for the relief of J. W. Drew, late additional paymaster in the United States Army, be taken from the Speaker's table and passed.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury of the United States to allow to John W. Drew, late additional paymaster in the United States Army, in the statement of his accounts for the months of November and December, 1868, the sum of $20,319.88 for disbursements made on vouchers lost in transmission, provided that said accounting officers shall be satisfied that said disbursements were made; and in determining the same secondary evidence may be received.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. NESMITH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That when the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses shall be under consideration it shall be in order to consider the following amendment:

The President is hereby authorized to detail or appoint as assistants to the Chief Signal Officer eight officers who while so serving shall have the rank and pay of captains mounted, and eight who shall have the rank and pay of first lieutenants mounted; and the enlisted men of the signal service shall receive pay and allowances at the rates formerly fixed for enlisted men of the Signal Corps of the Army of similar grades.

Mr. RANDALL. I think there should be some explanation of this.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It increases the force, and I object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. O'NEILL also objected.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I move that the rules be suspended and the resolution adopted.

The SPEAKER. If there be objection, the gentleman from Connecticut will have to withdraw his resolution. The motion really pending is that of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] to suspend the rules and pass the House bill No. 4149.

Mr. O'NEILL. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] also to object.

Mr. HALE. Does it add to the force?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It does not.

Mr. O'NEILL. I withdraw my objection, on the condition that I be allowed to offer an amendment to the gentleman's proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania need not make it a condition that he be allowed to do that which the rules would permit him to do.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. All I want is to have the privilege of offering this as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again put the question. Is there objection to agreeing to the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was agreed to.

SALE OF TIMBER LANDS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] has the floor to move to suspend the rules and pass the House bill No. 4149.

Mr. BRADLEY. I send to the desk the bill, with the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the amendments have to be inserted in several places. The bill should be sent up in such a condition that the House may have a correct apprehension of what it is voting on, and that it may vote on the bill as one proposition.

Meanwhile, until it is so prepared the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] for a motion to suspend the rules.

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the rules be suspended and that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3513) to enable the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company to submit its claim against the United States under existing laws to the decision of the Supreme Court, and that the same be passed.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, under and by virtue of the acts of Congress commonly called the Union Pacific Railroad acts, approved respectively July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, claim the right to enter on the public lands of the United States, and extend their railroad from its present terminus to a junction with the Main Trunk Union Pacific Railroad at or near the one hundredth meridian of longitude, and for that purpose to take earth, stone, and timber from the public lands adjacent thereto; and that they will be entitled to grants of lands and issues of bonds from time to time as the road is built, and as is provided in said acts in regard to other roads built under the same; and whereas doubts have arisen as to the true construction of said acts, and the rights and claims of the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company under the same: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all the said claims made by said Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company under said acts against the Government of the United States be referred to the Court of Claims, to be by them heard, adjudicated, and determined. For this purpose original jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court, with authority to hear and determine the questions of law and fact arising out of said claims of said Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, to state its findings of law and fact, and to give the true construction of the said acts, and determine the obligations of the Government of the United States in relation thereto, and also to enter judgment upon the same in the manner prescribed by the law and the rules and practice of said court; which findings and judgment shall be binding upon the said company, and also upon the Government of the United States, and the executive officers of the same. In case the decision of the Court of Claims shall be in favor of the said railroad company, the Attorney-General shall appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States for such findings and judgment, in the same manner as appeals are taken in other cases from said Court of Claims to said Supreme Court, or under such regulations as the said Supreme Court may direct; and a like appeal may be taken by said company in case the judgment or decree of the Court of Claims is adverse to said company. Said Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company may prepare a bill setting forth their rights and privileges and claims under said acts, and present the same to said Court of Claims for adjudication as aforesaid; a copy of which bill shall be delivered to the Attorney-General of the United States, who is hereby directed to appear and represent the rights of the United States in the premises. Either party shall be allowed to take evidence according to the rules and practice of said Court of Claims, and each of the said courts is requested to give the precedence to said cause upon their respective calendars.

SEC. 2. That in case the final judgment of said courts shall decide the right of said railroad company to extend their road as aforesaid, then the time for finishing said road mentioned in the said acts shall be extended for a period equal to the time consumed in the adjudication of said claims, computing the same from the date of final decision already rendered by the Department of Justice.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman that he modify his motion so as to make it one for the consideration of the bill at this time. He would not, certainly, urge the passage of a bill of this magnitude without consideration. This bill went last year, upon a point of order, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. It involves $8,000,000.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It involves a large land grant in addition to the subsidy.

Mr. FRYE. No, sir; it is only a proposition to send the claims of this company to the Supreme Court of the United States for decision.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. RANDALL. I beg pardon of the Chair; that is right.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Is it in order now to move that the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER. One motion that the House adjourn is in order.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I make that motion.

The question was put, and the House refused to adjourn.

Upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules tellers were ordered; and Mr. FRYE and Mr. W. R. ROBERTS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 13, noes not counted.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

SALE OF TIMBER LANDS.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 4149) for the sale of timber lands in the States of California and Oregon and in the Territories of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That surveyed public lands of the United States within the States of California and Oregon and in Washington Territory, not included within military, Indian, or other reservations of the United States, valuable chiefly for timber, but unfit for cultivation, and which have not been offered at public sale according to law, may be sold to citizens of the United States, or persons who have declared their intention to become such, in quantities not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to any one person, corporation, or association of persons, and in all other Territories of the United States not exceeding forty acres to any one person, corporation, or association of persons at the minimum price of $2.50 per acre: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall defeat or impair any bona fide claim under any law of the United States, or authorize the sale of any mining claim or the improvements of any bona fide settler, or lands containing gold, silver, cinnabar, copper, or coal, or lands selected by the said States under any law of the

Sec. 2. That any person desiring to avail himself of the provisions of this act shall file with the register of the proper district a written statement in duplicate, one of which is to be transmitted to the General Land Office, designating by legal subdivisions the particular tract of land he desires to purchase, setting forth that the same is unfit for cultivation, and valuable chiefly for its timber; that it is uninhabited, contains no mining or other improvements (except for ditch or canal purposes, where any such do exist) save such as were made by or belong to the applicant, nor, as deponent verily believes, any valuable deposit of gold, silver, cinnabar, copper, or coal; that deponent has made no other application under this act; that he does not apply to purchase the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use and benefit and not for sale; and that he has not, directly or indirectly, made any agreement or contract, in any way or manner, with any person or persons whatsoever, by which the title which he might acquire from the Government of the United States should inure, in whole or in part, to the benefit of any person except himself; which statement must be verified by the oath of the applicant before the register or the receiver of the land office within the district where the land is situated; and if any person taking such oath shall swear falsely in the premises, he shall be subject to all the pains and penalties of perjury, and shall forfeit the money which he may have paid for said lands, and all right and title to the same; and any grant or conveyance which he may have made, except in the hands of bona fide purchasers, shall be null and void.

Sec. 3. That upon the filing of said statement, as provided in the second section of this act, the register of the land office shall post a notice in some conspicuous place of such application, embracing a description of the land by legal subdivision, in his office, for a period of sixty days, and shall furnish the applicant a copy of the same for publication, at the expense of such applicant, in a newspaper published nearest the location of the premises, for a like period of time; and after the expiration of said sixty days, if no adverse claim shall have been filed, the person desiring to purchase shall furnish to the register of the land office satisfactory evidence, first, that said notice of the application prepared by the register as aforesaid was duly published in a newspaper as herein required; secondly, that the land is of the character contemplated in this act, unoccupied and without improvements, other than those excepted, either mining or agricultural, and that it apparently contains no valuable deposits of gold, silver, cinnabar, copper, or coal; and upon payment to the proper officer of the purchase-money of said land, together with the fees of the register and the receiver, as provided for in case of mining claims in the twelfth section of the act approved May 10, 1872, the applicant may be permitted to enter said tract; and on the transmission to the General Land Office of the papers and testimony in the case a patent shall issue thereon: Provided, That any person having a valid claim to any portion of the land may object, in writing, to the issuance of a patent to lands so held by him, stating the nature of his claim thereto; and evidence shall be taken, and the merits of said objection shall be determined by the officers of the land office, subject to appeal, as in other land cases. Effect shall be given to the foregoing provisions of this act by regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. This seems to be a very important bill, and I hope the gentleman from Michigan will be permitted to give some information to the House in regard to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan stated when he first made his motion that he was instructed by the Committee on the Public Lands to report the bill.

Mr. BRADLEY. I can send up the report to be read if gentlemen wish to hear it, or I will explain it in a minute if the House will listen to me.

This bill provides for the sale of lands in lots of forty acres in the Territories of the United States to any one person or association of persons; and in California, Oregon, and Washington Territory, it fixes the amount at one hundred and sixty acres. It relates only to land which is valuable for timber.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman if this is the same bill which was considered by the Committee on the Public Lands during the last Congress.

Mr. BRADLEY. Yes; it is the same one.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. It is then substantially the same bill which passed the last Congress.

Mr. BRADLEY. Yes, sir.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question was then put on suspending the rules; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

REORGANIZATION OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move so to suspend the rules that when the bill (H. R. No. 4729) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, is considered, it shall be in order to move as an amendment thereto the bill which has passed this House for the reorganization of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SENNER. I object. We should reorganize all the Departments or none; that is the way to do it.

The question was taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules; and on a division there were ayes 97, noes not counted.

So the motion was seconded.

The question was then taken on suspending the rules and agreeing to the motion; and on a division there were ayes 105, noes not counted.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the motion was agreed to.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. DURHAM. I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4322) amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes, be made the special order of this House, to the exclusion of all other business immediately after the reading of the Journal on Wednesday next.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. No. 4323) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase certain property for the use of the United States may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole on Wednesday next immediately after the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4322.)

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will submit the question separately on those resolutions.

Mr. DURHAM. I have no objection to doing that.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the House will not make anything a special order to the exclusion of the appropriation bills. We have been driven out for two weeks already.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] is willing to have the resolutions voted on separately.

Mr. DURHAM. One of these bills will be required to go to the Committee of the Whole unless it is taken out by order of the House.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. If the gentleman will modify his motion so as to have the bill now considered in the House I will go for it.

Mr. DURHAM. The bill is not perfected yet; there are some amendments to it which ought to be considered.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let them be considered when the bill is considered.

Mr. DURHAM. Very well. I will move to suspend the rules so as to proceed with the consideration of the bill at this time.

SELECTION OF JURORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] to yield to me to ask unanimous consent of the House to concur in some Senate amendments to a bill which it is very important shall be passed to-day.

Mr. DURHAM. If the House will agree to that, I will yield.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] yields to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to submit a proposition to the House.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the House to concur in the Senate amendments to the jury bill for the District of Columbia, being House bill No. 4669 to provide for the selection of grand and petit jurors in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read.

Mr. DAWES. There are but two amendments; one is to strike out the words "who shall be able to read and write in the English language" and the other is a slight amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in connection with this subject. Has not the time expired that would make this bill of any force or effect against the person whom it was intended to reach; in other words, William S. King?

Mr. DAWES. The time has not yet expired; it is very close at hand. The bill has come back from the Senate, and I have been struggling every day since to get it up.

Mr. RANDALL. I know; I commend the gentleman for that. But I want to know the fact when the time does expire.

Mr. DAWES. I would not want to say exactly when the time does expire.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman know?

Mr. DAWES. I do not think it has expired yet; I could tell if I were in my committee-room, but I cannot tell here.

Mr. MAYNARD. Does the gentleman mean to say that this bill is a piece of artillery aimed at a particular person?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object to anything and everything that looks like legislation of the whole Congress to kill one man.

Mr. RANDALL. It depends upon whether the man is a culprit or not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not care who he is.

Mr. DAWES. Then I move to so suspend the rules as to concur in the Senate amendments to that bill.

The motion was seconded; and the rules were then suspended and the amendments were concurred in, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

HEAD-STONES FOR SOLDIERS' GRAVES, WOODLAWN CEMETERY, NEW YORK.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] to yield to me to offer a resolution which I think will not meet with serious opposition.

Mr. DURHAM. If it does not take too much time I will yield.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules be so suspended as that it shall be in order in Committee of the Whole to consider an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill providing for head-stones at the graves of Union and confederate soldiers in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York, and for the proper care of said graves.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution adopted.

PAY OF CONTESTANTS.

Mr. PIKE. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules be so far suspended that it may be in order at the time the deficiency appropriation bill is before the Committee of the Whole House to move an amendment thereto to pay the expenditures in whole or in part of such parties to contested-election cases as the Committee on Elections may recommend; and that the rules be so far suspended that the Committee on Appropriations may insert the same in said bill if they determine so to do.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is a change of a law which was made after deliberate consideration and judgment.

Mr. PIKE. It is only asking the Committee on Appropriations to consider the matter.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. It will bring up a lot of old claims.

Mr. HALE of Maine. I object to it.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution is not before the House, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] being entitled to the floor.

RANCHO PANOCHO GRANDE TRACT, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That when the sundry civil appropriation bill shall be under consideration of the Committee of the Whole, it shall be in order to report from the Committee on the Judiciary an amendment thereto providing an appropriation of money to enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to institute and prosecute suits to recover certain lands, and the rents and profits thereof, known as the Rancho Panocho Grande tract, in California, as provided in resolution No. 142, passed by the House of Representatives on the 26th day of January, 1875.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object to that resolution.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then I ask that the rules be suspended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] is entitled to the floor on a motion to suspend the rules.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. DURHAM. I would like to accommodate all gentlemen, but I cannot do so. I must now insist upon my motion to so suspend the rules as to bring before the House for consideration at this time House bill No. 4322, amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAINEY. I hope the gentleman will not press that motion, or if he does that it will be voted down.

The question was upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DURHAM, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 94, noes 52.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the motion to suspend the rules and bring the bill before the House at once for consideration.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. For how long?

The SPEAKER. The motion does not fix any limit.

Mr. POLAND and others. It will take the whole day.

Mr. SENER. Let it be limited to one hour.

Mr. DURHAM. I will agree to that.

The SPEAKER. The motion cannot be modified now, because it has been seconded.

The question being taken on agreeing to the motion to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 75, noes 71.

Mr. DURHAM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAYNARD. Before we proceed to vote, I hope I may be allowed to make a brief statement.

Several members objected.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Would it be in order now to limit the debate to one hour?

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules cannot be amended.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 126, nays 101, not voting 60; as follows:

Mr. LAWSON. My colleague, Mr. TREMAIN, is absent from the House to-day on account of severe illness.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. MYERS. I move to suspend the rules so as to enable the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report and the House to pass the bill (H. R. No. 4747) supplementary to the acts in relation to immigration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in determining whether the immigration of any subject of China, Japan, or any Oriental country, to the United States, is free and voluntary, as provided by section 2162 of the revised code, title "immigration," it shall be the duty of the consul-general or consul of the United States residing at the port from which it is proposed to convey such subjects, in any vessels enrolled or licensed in the United States, or any port within the same, before delivering to the masters of any such vessels the permit or certificate provided for in said section, to ascertain whether such immigrant has entered into a contract or agreement for a term of service within the United States for lewd and immoral purposes; and if there be such contract or agreement, the said consul-general or consul shall not deliver the required permit or certificate.

SEC. 2. That if any citizen of the United States, or other person amenable to the laws of the United States, shall take, or cause to be taken or transported, to or from the United States any subject of China, Japan, or any Oriental country, without their free and voluntary consent, for the purpose of holding them to a term of service, such citizen or other person shall be liable to be indicted therefor, and, on conviction of such offense, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000, and be imprisoned not exceeding one year; and all contracts and agreements for a term of service of such persons in the United States, whether made in advance or in pursuance of such illegal importation, and whether such importation shall have been in American or other vessels, are hereby declared void.

SEC. 3. That the importation into the United States of women for the purposes of prostitution is hereby forbidden; and all contracts and agreements in relation thereto, made in advance or in pursuance of such illegal importation and purposes, are hereby declared void; and whoever shall knowingly and willfully import or cause any importation of women into the United States for the purposes of prostitution, or shall knowingly or willfully hold, or attempt to hold, any woman to such purposes, in pursuance of such illegal importation and contract or agreement, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned not exceeding five years and pay a fine not exceeding $5,000.

SEC. 4. That if any person shall knowingly and willfully contract, or attempt to contract, in advance or in pursuance of such illegal importation, to supply to another the labor of any cooly or other person brought into the United States in violation of section 2153 of the Revised Statutes, or of any other section of the laws prohibiting the cooly trade, such person shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, in any United States court, shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $500, and imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for aliens of the following classes to immigrate into the United States, namely, persons who are undergoing a sentence for conviction in their own country of felonious crimes other than political, or whose sentence has been remitted on condition of their emigration, and women "imported for the purposes of prostitution." Every vessel arriving in the United States may be inspected under the direction of the collector of the port at which it arrives, if he shall have reason to believe that any such obnoxious persons are on board; and the officer making such inspection shall certify the result thereof to the master or other person in charge of such vessel, designating in such certificate the person or persons, if any there be, ascertained by him to be of either of the classes whose importation is hereby forbidden. When such inspection is required by the collector as aforesaid, it shall be unlawful, without his permission, for any alien to leave any such vessel arriving in the United States from a foreign country until the inspection shall have been had and the result certified as herein provided; and at no time thereafter shall any alien certified to by the inspecting officer as being of either of the classes whose immigration is forbidden by this section be allowed to land in the United States, except in obedience to a judicial process issued pursuant to law. If any person shall feel aggrieved by the certificate of such inspecting officer stating him or her to be within either of the classes whose immigration is forbidden by this section, and shall apply for release or other remedy to any proper court or judge, then it shall be the duty of the collector at said port of entry to detain said vessel until a hearing and determination of the matter are had, to the end that if the action of the said inspector shall be found to be in accordance with this section and sustained, the obnoxious person or persons shall be returned on board of said vessel, and shall not thereafter be permitted to land, unless the master, owner, or consignee of the vessel shall give bond and security, to be approved by the court or judge hearing the cause, in the sum of $500 for each such person permitted to land, conditioned for the return of such person, within six months from the date thereof, to the country whence his or her emigration shall have taken place, or unless the vessel bringing such obnoxious person or persons shall be forfeited, in which event the proceeds of such forfeiture shall be paid over to the collector of the port of arrival and applied by him, as far as necessary, to the return of such person or persons to his or her own country within the said period of six months. And for all violations of this act, the vessel, by the acts, omissions, or connivance of the owners, master, or other custodian, or the consignees of which the same are committed, shall be liable to forfeiture, and may be proceeded against as in cases of frauds against the revenue laws, for which forfeiture is prescribed by existing law.

The motion to suspend the rules, being seconded, was then agreed to, (two-thirds voting in the affirmative;) and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be so suspended that the following matters shall be in order as parts of the sundry civil appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, namely: Clauses authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept the gift of sites for life-saving stations; regulating the printing of the national currency; limiting the time within which claims for property lost in the military service shall be presented; directing the Secretary of War to report to Congress as to the sale of arsenal property, with an estimate as to the probable amount to be derived from such sale; authorizing the purchase of certain sites for military posts; providing for the care and control of Government property in Washington; for regulating travel over the Washington Aqueduct bridge; directing the sale of the old Philadelphia navy yard; authorizing the purchase of the Stevens battery; relating to clerical force employed in publication of official war records; changing the limit of the cost of certain public buildings and regulating estimates and cost of public buildings hereafter; regulating the survey of certain private land claims; also a section providing for certain tests in American iron and steel; and a section enabling the Government to exhibit in its several departments in the national exposition of 1876.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to have that section and clause read in regard to printing bank-notes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Regulating the printing of the national currency.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to know whether the whole subject will be open to amendment?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I drew it in that way so it should be open to all amendments. I made the clause general, leaving it open to the action of the House. It ties up nobody.

There was a second; and the rules were suspended and the resolution adopted.

Mr. HOUGHTON obtained the floor.

SIXTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH JOINT RULES.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules of the two Houses be suspended for the residue of the present session.

JOHN L. SMITH.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, moved to take up and pass a bill (H. R. No. 4434) giving certain authority to the accounting officers of the Treasury in the case of John L. Smith.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the proper accounting officers of the Treasury in the settlement of the accounts of John L. Smith, late Indian agent to the Ottos, now deceased, to consider and adjust the same upon the best evidence accessible to them, allowing such credits as may seem just and equitable, and with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KASSON. I have a letter here from the Comptroller recommending the passage of the bill, but I do not suppose there is any necessity for taking up time with its reading.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALCOHOLIC AND FERMENTED LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. POLAND. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill (S. No. 161) to provide for the appointment of a commission on the subject of the alcoholic and fermented liquor traffic, with amendments.

The first section of the bill provides that there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commission of five persons, neither of whom shall be the holder of any office of profit or trust in the general or a State government; that the said commissioners shall be selected solely with reference to personal fitness and capacity for an honest, impartial, and thorough investigation, and shall hold office until their duties shall be accomplished, but not to exceed one year; that it shall be their duty to investigate the alcoholic and fermented liquor traffic and manufacture, having special reference to revenue and taxation, distinguishing as far as possible in the conclusions they arrive at between the effects produced by the use of distilled or spirituous liquors, as distinguished from the use of fermented or malt liquors, in their economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects, in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and general welfare of the people; and also to inquire and take testimony as to the practical results of license and restrictive legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several States, and the effect produced by such legislation upon the consumption of distilled or spirituous liquors and of fermented or malt liquors, and also to ascertain whether the evil of drunkenness has been decreased or increased thereby; whether the use of opium as a stimulant substituted for alcoholic drinks has become more general in consequence of such legislation, and whether public morals have been improved thereby; that it shall also be the duty of said commissioners to gather information and take testimony as to whether the evil of drunkenness exists to the same extent or more so in other civilized countries, and whether those foreign nations that are considered the most temperate in the use of stimulants are so through prohibitory laws, and also to what degree prohibitory legislation has affected the consumption and manufacture of malt and spirituous liquors in the country.

The second section provides that the said commissioners, all of whom shall not be advocates of prohibitory legislation or total abstinence in relation to alcoholic or fermented liquors, shall serve without salary; that they shall be authorized to employ a secretary at a reasonable compensation, not to exceed $2,000 per year, which, with the necessary expenses incidental to said investigation, of both the secretary and commissioners, not exceeding $10,000, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon vouchers to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and that for this purpose the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated; and that it shall be the further duty of said commissioners to report the result of their investigation and the expenses attending the same to the President, to be by him transmitted to Congress.

Mr. POLAND. Now read the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend first section by striking out "one year" and inserting "two years."

Strike out second section and insert the following:

SEC. 2. The said commissioners shall not all be advocates of prohibitory legislation or total abstinence in relation to alcoholic or fermented liquors; they may employ a secretary, but no salary shall be paid to said commissioners or secretary, nor shall any money be paid from the Treasury for expenses incurred in making said investigation. Said commissioners shall report the result of their investigation to the President, to be by him transmitted to Congress.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object. It will add a million dollars to our expenses before we get through with it. It proposes to put into the hands of the Federal Government the entire subject of temperance.

Mr. BUCKNER. I object.

Mr. POLAND. I move a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending to suspend the rules, made by the gentleman from California, [Mr. HOUGHTON,] and the proposition of the gentleman from Vermont being objected to, it is not before the House.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 160) providing for the restoration of the original Declaration of Independence; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that a commission, consisting of the Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and the Librarian of Congress, be empowered to have resort to such means as will most effectually restore the writing of the original manuscript of the Declaration of Independence, with the signatures appended thereto, now in the United States Patent Office, and the expense attending the same shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Interior Department.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. COBURN. I ask unanimous consent that Thursday evening may be assigned to reports from the Committee on Military Affairs, no other business to be transacted.

Mr. RANDALL. Subject to points of order.

The SPEAKER. Of course all points of order are reserved. This assignment would not waive any points of order in regard to any matter containing an appropriation of money.

Mr. LOWE. Does that include reports of the committee now on the Calendar in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SENER. I object, and call for the regular order.

Mr. COBURN. I move that the rules be suspended and the order made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HOUGHTON] has been holding the floor for a motion to suspend the rules.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so as to allow the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to report on Wednesday evening next, at the hour of half past seven o'clock, the bill of the House No. 4547, amendatory of and supplementary to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and the act supplementary thereto, approved May 2, 1872; and the act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific Ocean," approved July 27, 1866, for consideration in the House; the vote upon the passage of the bill to be taken on Thursday morning next immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Is not this what is generally known as the Tom Scott subsidy bill?

Mr. HOUGHTON. I ask leave to say one word to the House in explanation.

Mr. MERRIAM. I move to adjourn.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. STORM. I object to debate.

On the question of seconding the motion to suspend the rules tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOUGHTON and Mr. STORM were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 118, noes 62.

So the motion was seconded.

The question recurred on suspending the rules and agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. KASSON, Mr. HAWLEY of Connecticut, and Mr. MERRIAM called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KILLINGER. I ask that the resolution may be reported again, as I think a good many members voted under misapprehension.

The resolution was again read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 126, not voting 44; as follows:

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barrere, Benjamin F. Butler, Cason, Chittenden, Clayton, Clinton L. Cobb, Cotton, Creamer, Curtis, Duell, Eden, Field, Robert S. Hale, John T. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Hurlbut, Kendall, Knapp, Mitchell, Niblack, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, James H. Platt, jr., Poland, Ransier, Rapier, Robbins, James C. Robinson, Ross, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Small, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles R. Thomas, Tremain, Whitehouse, Whiteley, Wilber, William Williams, and Wolfe—44.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. ROBINSON, of Illinois, is detained from the House by sickness. On this question, on which one vote pairs two, I am paired with that gentleman and with Mr. HARRIS of Virginia.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am paired on this question with Mr. ROBINSON, of Illinois. He would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is that of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. No. 161) with amendments. Pending that, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE], chairman of the Committee on War Claims, desires to report and have passed now a bill making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871. It is a lengthy bill and contains no legislation whatever, except appropriating for the payment of the awards of the commissioners.

Mr. GARFIELD. What is the title?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Seven hundred and forty-eight thousand two hundred and ninety-six dollars and thirty-nine cents.

Mr. GARFIELD. How does that correspond with the amount last year?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is larger by about $100,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] have five minutes to explain the bill. That will give more information to the House than the reading of it.

Mr. NEGLEY. I object.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] to pass the bill (S. No. 161) to provide for the appointment of a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic, with amendments.

The bill and amendments were again read.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Vermont whether three gentlemen cannot go on and make this examination and report themselves without being appointed by the President?

Mr. ELDREDGE. It is because it is sought to establish a department in the Government to take charge of this; and it will not end with that, either.

Mr. POLAND. I will answer the question; the gentleman from Wisconsin need not answer it. The temperance people of this country desire something that shall be of some authority that they can go before the country with, and they have to pay all the expense themselves.

Mr. ELDREDGE. No; they will come here for their pay, and they will get it, too.

Mr. SPEER. Who is to determine whether the commissioners appointed are temperance men or not?

Mr. POLAND. The man that appoints them, of course.

Mr. SPEER. That is the President of the United States.

Mr. POLAND. Yes, sir; and he is a very good judge.

Upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules the Chair ordered tellers; and Mr. POLAND and Mr. ELDREDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 65.

So the motion was seconded.

The question was on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered; 37 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 133, nays 83, not voting 71; as follows:

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

BUSINESS OF THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. COBURN. I ask unanimous consent that Thursday evening next be assigned to the Committee on Military Affairs to make reports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to that proposition?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I hope there will be no objection; two hours were reserved for the chairman of the committee and myself because we were absent at the South by order of the House.

Mr. LOWE. I hope that the order will embrace bills upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Waiving all points of order?

Mr. LOWE. Yes, sir.

Several MEMBERS. O, no; that will not do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to that proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. O, yes; the chairman of the committee had better keep to his original proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection, then, to allowing the Committee on Military Affairs Thursday evening next to report bills subject to points of order? The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SHANKS. I move that the rules be suspended and the following resolution passed:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is hereby instructed to report a bill to the House for its consideration providing for local jurisdiction in the United States courts of all claims against the United States held by any citizen thereof and prohibiting the filing or introduction of such claim before Congress; and said committee is hereby authorized to report at any time; and it shall further be in order for said committee to move said bill as an amendment to any appropriation bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that resolution will not be adopted.

The question was put on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, and no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SHANKS and Mr. COX were appointed.

Mr. SPEER. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to omit the last part of that resolution.

Mr. SHANKS. I will modify it by omitting that part of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Then if there be no further objection no further count will be had, and the resolution will be regarded as adopted.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I call for a further count.

The SPEAKER. Then the tellers must resume their places.

Mr. SHANKS. I do not care to make any amendment in the resolution unless it will do some good.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 102, noes 49.

So the motion was seconded.

The question was upon suspending the rules and adopting the resolution.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SHANKS and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 79, noes 74.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

SALE OF CADET RIFLES.

Mr. G. F. HOAR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4834) to authorize the sale of cadet rifles; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SOUTHERN CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move to suspend the rules and pass two bills from the Committee on War Claims, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4692) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4731) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported to Congress under section 2 of the act of Congress approved June 16, 1874, by the Secretary of the Treasury, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the first bill, No. 4692, contains no legislation; but the second bill, No. 4731, contains independent legislation, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the claims of subjects or citizens of a foreign state against the United States may be referred to the Court of Claims by the Secretary of State, with the concurrence of the foreign government presenting them; and the Court of Claims shall then have jurisdiction to hear and determine the same in accordance with the principles of international law, or in pursuance of any treaty stipulation or agreement between the United States and such foreign state. Claims may be prosecuted in the name of the claimant by petition in the nature of a petition of right. All cases shall proceed according to the rules and practice of the Court of Claims. Either party shall have the right of appeal from the final judgment of said court. Judgments, if against the United States for damages in money, shall be satisfied in like manner as other judgments of said court, unless otherwise provided by treaty or other stipulation between the United States and the government presenting the claim. Claims accruing after the passage of this act shall be subject to the same limitations and other provisions as other claims.

SEC. 3. That after the 1st day of January, 1876, no claim against the United States shall be presented to, audited, allowed, or paid by any Department or officer of the United States unless the same shall have been filed in the proper Department or with the proper officer within six years after the claimant had the legal capacity and right to so file or present such claim. Nothing herein shall limit the time for filing any claim where, by existing law, the time is fixed for filing such claim.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire to state that the two sections just read have been agreed to by the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to ask what is the amount of appropriations in these bills?

Mr. NEGLEY. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the amount of appropriation in each bill be stated, or else that the bills be read.

Mr. NEGLEY. I object to any debate.

Mr. CESSNA. I ask the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] in the light of the example this will be to future Congresses, to divide his motion, and have a vote taken on each bill separately?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will state the amount of claims allowed—

Mr. NEGLEY. I insist upon my motion to adjourn, and object to any debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to remind gentlemen that to-night has been set apart for the consideration of the tax bill for the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to have the House go into Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill.

Mr. COTTON. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock. This evening has been set apart for the consideration of the tax bill for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. NEGLEY. I will withdraw that motion for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to move to go into Committee of the Whole upon the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. If the motion to adjourn is withdrawn, the question will recur upon the motion to suspend the rules submitted by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

Mr. NEGLEY. Then I will not withdraw my motion.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn, and it was not agreed to; upon a division ayes 44, noes not counted.

Mr. CESSNA. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order pending the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CONGER. Is it in order to ask for the reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules, among them the one which allows the bill to be read.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am willing to have a separate vote taken on each bill, and I will give any explanation that may be desired.

Mr. NEGLEY. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass House bill 4692, making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871.

Mr. THOMPSON. If in order, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is a right under the rules, and the gentleman moves to suspend that rule as well as all others.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAWRENCE and Mr. COX were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 137, noes 15.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question being then taken on agreeing to the motion, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof; and the bill (H. R. No. 4692) was accordingly passed.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 4731) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported to Congress under section 2 of the act of Congress approved June 16, 1874, by the Secretary of the Treasury, and for other purposes.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] whether this bill will allow the Secretary of State, without coming to Congress, to refer a claim of any foreign government or any citizen of a foreign government against the United States.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It will.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Then a claim growing out of a war, involving possibly millions of dollars—like the Alabama claims—might be referred by the Secretary of State without any action of Congress.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The President has recommended the establishment of a circuit court for this purpose; but we concluded to confer this jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims. Every foreign government—

Mr. NEGLEY and others objected to debate.

Mr. KELLOGG. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] will allow an amendment striking out the second and third sections.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COX. I call for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion is, in part, to deprive the gentleman of his right under the rules to have the bill read.

The question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules it was not agreed to, there being ayes 22, noes not counted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had concurred in the resolution of the House authorizing the printing in quarto form of the report of Major Powell's expedition.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 4441) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1876.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 4676) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1876.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 1297) to provide for the republication of the first volume of the Patent Office Gazette.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, (in which the concurrence of the House was requested,) the resolution for printing five thousand extra copies of the memorial services held in the House of Representatives, April 16, 1872, on the occasion of the death of the late Samuel F. B. Morse.

MEMORIAL SERVICES OF S. F. B. MORSE.

Mr. DONNAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the resolution of the House for printing five thousand copies of the memorial services held in the House of Representatives April 16, 1872, in commemoration and honor of the late Samuel F. B. Morse, be taken from the Speaker's table and concurred in. The amendments simply strike out the provision for supplying the Senate with copies, and reduce the aggregate number to thirty-five hundred, all of which are to be for the use of the House.

There being no objection, the amendments were concurred in.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I move to suspend the rules and pass a bill (H. R. No. 4835) in relation to the Quartermaster's Department, fixing its status, reducing its numbers, and regulating appointments and promotions therein. This bill reduces the force in that Department, and will save money to the Government.

The bill was read. It provides that the Quartermaster's Department of the Army shall hereafter consist of the Quartermaster-General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier-general; four assistant quartermasters-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonels of cavalry; eight deputy quartermasters-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant-colonels of cavalry; fourteen quartermasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors of cavalry; and thirteen assistant quartermasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains of cavalry.

Section 2 provides that no more appointments shall be made in the grade of military store-keepers in the Quartermaster's Department, and that this grade shall cease to exist as soon as the same becomes vacant by death, resignation, or otherwise of the present incumbents.

Section 3 provides that no officer now in the service shall be reduced in rank or deprived of his commission by reason of any provision of this act.

Section 4 enacts that no officer shall be promoted or appointed in the Quartermaster's Department in excess of the organization prescribed by this act; and that so much of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1869, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1870, and for other purposes," as applies to the Quartermaster's Department be repealed.

CLAIMS OF MAIL CONTRACTORS.

Mr. VANCE. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That when the deficiency appropriation bill is under consideration it shall be in order to offer an amendment to the same, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the amounts found due to mail contractors on or before the 31st of May, 1861.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

The House resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. ALBRIGHT, to suspend the rules and pass the bill in regard to the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that my colleague [Mr. ALBRIGHT] will be allowed to make some explanation of this bill.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. If the House will permit me, I shall be glad to do so. Under the law of 1866 the number of officers in the Quartermaster's Department was ninety-two. Since then a restriction has been placed on that Department and others in not allowing promotion. This proposes to open promotion in that Department, fixing the number at fifty-seven. The number is now sixty-four; so that it will not only reduce the number of officers in the Quartermaster's Department, but entirely do away with the military store-keepers.

Mr. RANDALL. What about the pay?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. There will be a considerable reduction of pay in the aggregate.

Mr. FORT. Promotion has been opened in the other staff corps.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. It has.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does it create any disturbance in the present rank of officers?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Not at all.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill was passed.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3700) granting a pension to Teter Wolfgang;

An act (H. R. No. 3708) granting a pension to Eunice Wilson, mother of John C. Wilson, late private Company D, Forty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 3717) granting a pension to Sarah McAdams;

An act (S. No. 760) for the relief of Major J. W. Nichols, paymaster United States Army; and

An act (S. No. 1035) for the relief of J. W. Drew, late additional paymaster in the United States Army.

MAIL CONTRACTORS BEFORE 1861.

Mr. VANCE. I move to suspend the rules and pass the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

That when the deficiency appropriation bill is under consideration it shall be in order to offer an amendment to the same authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the amounts found due to mail contractors on or before the 31st of May, 1861.

The question recurred on seconding the motion.

Mr. VANCE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. VANCE and Mr. BASS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 87, noes 79.

So the motion was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will retain their places and count the vote on the suspension of the rules.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 62.

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

Mr. COTTON. I move the House take a recess until seven and a half o'clock this evening.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask a parliamentary question: whether the power to suspend the rules will belong to the evening session?

The SPEAKER. It was not given for that purpose, but given wholly to the District of Columbia business, and suspension of the rules will not be in order.

Mr. RANDALL. All points of order were reserved for to-night.

The SPEAKER. The session of the House this evening is for business of the District of Columbia wholly.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to suggest that when that was agreed to I specially reserved all points of order on all the bills that committee might introduce.

The SPEAKER. The Chair remembers that very well; but it was not necessary to reserve points of order, as the suspension of the rules by the House took away from the gentleman that right.

Mr. COTTON. The District tax bill is in the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. During the evening session the Chair will be occupied by Mr. G. F. HOAR as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. HARRISON. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. It is not so highly privileged as the motion the gentleman from Iowa makes to take a recess.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. COX. I wish to correct the Chinese immigration bill according to an understanding I have had with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MYERS.] It is a verbal correction which unless made will bring the bill back, I fear, from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. In what particular does the gentleman propose to correct it?

Mr. COX. I have sent it up to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York states that it is the understanding of the Committee on Foreign Affairs a correction should be made to the Chinese immigration bill passed by this House this morning under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. MYERS. The understanding is that the gentleman from New York should move his correction. I am willing to accept it as a part of my motion.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania mean his suspension of the rules to include the correction of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. COX. If anybody objects, I will withdraw it. It is simply to make a verbal correction.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 of section 5, after the word "political," insert "growing out of or the result of such political offenses."

Mr. MYERS. It is only to perfect the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to that correction being made in the bill passed this morning?

Mr. MYERS. It has the unanimous sanction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MEMPHIS, CLARKSVILLE AND LOUISVILLE RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will detain the House to submit the following from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills be authorized in the enrollment of House bill No. 1938 to extend the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of debts due from southern railroads, and for other purposes," to change the word "Linville" to "Louisville" in the ninth line of the Senate substitute therefor; so the line will read "the Memphis, Clarksville and Louisville."

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, papers in the following cases were withdrawn from the files of the House; no adverse reports having been made:

By Mr. DANFORD: In the case of Abraham Palmer.

By Mr. LOUGHRIDGE: In the case of Bird L. Fletcher.

And then, on motion of Mr. COTTON, (at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes p.m.) the House took a recess till seven o'clock and thirty minutes p.m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p.m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. G. F. HOAR.) The House is in session this evening specially to consider business reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. The bill under consideration when the House was last considering business reported by the Committee for the District was the bill (H. R. No. 4728) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876.

SOUTHERN MARYLAND RAILROAD.

Mr. THOMPSON. Before the House resumes the consideration of that bill I ask leave to report and to have passed a bill authorizing the Southern Maryland Railroad to extend into the District of Columbia.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I object. I understood no business was to be considered this evening except what was reported from the Committee on the District.

Mr. THOMPSON. I report this bill by direction of the committee.

This is a bill authorizing this railroad company to extend its line of railroad from the southern boundary of the District into the District of Columbia so as to connect with other railroads passing through the District. It guards most thoroughly the interests of the property-holders. This is a railroad now extending from the District of Columbia to Point Comfort or the junction of Chesapeake Bay and the Potomac River. The State of Maryland of course can give it no right to extend into the District of Columbia and the object of this bill is to enable it to connect within the District with those railroads that are running to Baltimore. All it grants is the right of way from the boundary line of the District to a point on the Potomac River, probably from three to five miles, running through the property of private individuals and not coming within the city of Washington at all. The bill guards the rights of property-holders so that no injury can be done to any one. The mode of condemnation is specifically pointed out, and the safeguards are as rigid as in the case of any railroad ever organized.

Mr. ARCHER. May I ask the gentleman whether or not this road touches the property of the Insane Asylum?

Mr. THOMPSON. It does not; and there is a provision in the bill that it shall not touch any property owned by the Government.

Mr. W. R. ROBERTS. This seems to me to be too important a bill to be acted upon with so thin a House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can only be reported now by unanimous consent.

Mr. THOMPSON. I withdraw the bill for the present until the tax bill shall be disposed of.

TAX BILL FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the bill reported by the Committee on the District last week, the bill (H. R. No. 4728) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. SMALL,] which the Clerk will again read.

Insert at the end of the first section the following:
Personal property for the purposes of taxation shall include goods, chattels, and effects wherever they are; money at interest, and other debts due to the persons to be taxed more than they owe interest for; public stocks and securities; stocks in moneyed and other dividend-paying corporations.

Mr. COTTON. I oppose the amendment. I do not think we should undertake to enumerate personal property as is done in this amendment. If we do we should omit a great deal. I think it better to let the matter remain as it is in the bill. The amendment undertakes to define what shall be personal property and taxed as such. By adopting that definition we would omit many things, as would be found out when the law began to be applied.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. COTTON. I move pro forma to strike out the three last words of the section, for the purpose of presenting to the House a more detailed statement, which we have received from the commissioners of the District, of the expenses which go to make up the sum of one million and odd dollars of "general expenses of the District." It is too long to be read now. I desire to have it published where it can be conveniently referred to. The statement is furnished by the comptroller of the District. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There was no objection and it was so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, Washington, D. C., February 18, 1875.

Sir: Agreeably with your request we send you herewith a detailed statement of the items included in the general fund in our estimate of expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, with a copy of statement of aggregate of the estimates for the same year. FITZHUGH COYLE, Comptroller District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the first section by adding the proviso which I send to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That not more than seventy-five cents on each hundred dollars shall be levied and collected on the cash value of lands in the county of Washington.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, this policy, I believe, is adopted in almost all of the cities—I know that it is in my city—to make a distinction between what I may term city property and the suburban property known as rural property. In support of the position taken in the amendment I desire to read a statement of the assessments and taxation on lands in the county of Washington for the years 1864 and 1874, as shown by the books of the collector of taxes. The assessment in 1864 of rural property was $2,002,433. The rate of taxation in 1864 was forty cents per hundred dollars of valuation. I find that in 1874 the assessment was $9,621,300. The tax was $2 per $100. Increase of valuation nearly 500 per cent. in ten years. Increase of taxation 500 per cent. in ten years.

I will take as an instance a piece of property which I am informed and believe is a fair criterion of all the rest of the rural property in this particular:

Illustration of the case of one owner of lands in the county of Washington which is applicable to the others.

Year.	Acres.	Assessment.	Valuation.	Tax.	Paid.
1864.....	40½	$150 per acre.	$6,075 00	40c. per $100	$24 30
1874.....	40½	$150 per acre. Improvement...	30,308 00 3,500 00
			33,808 00	2 per 100.	$676 16

Increase of taxes twenty-eight fold in ten years.

This property is one of the most eligible in the District, and only a mile and a half from the Post-Office on the Seventh-street road, by the horse-cars. It was rented for $1,200 per annum, and vacated because the rent was too high.

The taxes are $676 16
Insurance 55 00

Without wear and tear 731 16

The county of Washington is composed mainly of farming lands, which have to compete with those of Maryland, where taxation is low. There is no redundant population in this city to require suburban residences as in the great commercial and manufacturing cities, and therefore these lands are necessarily devoted to agriculture even to the very boundary of the city.

Mr. W. R. ROBERTS. Does the gentleman refer to improved or unimproved property?

Mr. RANDALL. I am speaking of the unimproved lands, the rural lands. If you compel the improved lands to pay a tax of $1.50 on the $100 valuation, then you ought to make the unimproved lands pay about half as much, or 75 cents on $100 valuation.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Where will you draw the line of distinction?

Mr. RANDALL. It is very well drawn already. It divides the rural property and the rural residences from the city.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Allow me to suggest that rural property includes all that lies outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, being outside of the city limits.

Mr. RANDALL. There are farming lands lying outside of the city limits. It is proposed to tax these farming lands at the same rate as the best property on Pennsylvania avenue, though they are denied streets, water, gas, and only enjoy schools and police on the most limited scale.

The object of this enormous and unjust tax is to make the country pay toll for the speculators in the city who have inflated prices. The assessments of these farming lands for 1864 and 1874 show how arbitrary and excessive were the last valuations to extort revenue. All former tax bills discriminated between city and country property, as is the practice elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, the tax on these lands ought not equitably to exceed fifty cents on each hundred dollars valuation; but the amendment I have offered proposes seventy-five cents, or one-half the rate named for the city.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL:]

Insert after the word "dollars" in the first section the words "on real property outside of the cities, severally, of Washington and Georgetown, and $2 on each $100 on real property within such cities, and $2 upon personal property within the District of Columbia."

If the House will allow me, I will say that the object of that amendment is to increase the rate of taxation. The bill now provides that there shall be a tax of $1.50 upon each $100 worth of real and personal property. This amendment provides that there shall be $1.50 on the real property outside of the cities and $2 on each $100 worth within the city limits, and $2 on each $100 of personal property, wherever situated. I understand that persons who are really residents of the city have residences outside of the city; and although all their business is done in the city, which is the place where they make their money, yet by chance their residence is outside of the city limits and therefore the tax upon their property is much smaller than it would otherwise be. It seems proper, therefore, to make the distinction in the tax between real and personal property, which is made in this amendment, outside of the city limits.

I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there should be some distinction made between the tax upon real and personal property outside of the city and that within the city; I submit, however, that he makes the distinction too great. It is said that a tax of $1.50 on $100 valuation of property outside of the city and $2 within the city would raise not less than $2,000,000, probably more than one-half of the estimated expenses of the District for the coming year; but, as I said the other day, we shall appropriate this year in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the support of the various charities in this District so as to do more than meet the fair share on the part of the General Government in defraying the expenses of the District. A large portion of these expenses are not occasioned by reason of the fact that this is the capital of the nation. I agree that so far as the streets and avenues of the city are concerned the Government should pay its fair proportion of the cost of their improvement. But the expense of schools for instance in this District, the expense of police, of the board of health, and the hundred other kinds of expenses than those for streets, are expenses incident to the city as such, and should be borne by the city as such.

Neither do I agree that because the Government owns large amounts of valuable property here—what would be large amounts of property if it was estimated at the rate that property in the city elsewhere than in the Capitol grounds would be estimated for building purposes—therefore we ought to pay largely the expenses; because as has been suggested in former Congresses, and as it is very pertinent to suggest here, if the Capitol and other public buildings were not here it is obvious enough that real estate would be worth very much less in the city than it is to-day. Therefore it is for the benefit of the people who are here that these public buildings are in this city; that is, it increases very largely the value of their real estate. There is no reason then why they should not pay very many of the expenses incident even to the location of the public buildings here.

They cannot turn around and say to the people of the United States, "You have located your Capitol and other public buildings here, and therefore you should be at all this charge"—not by any means. But they can reasonably enough say that if we require wider streets here, a better class of pavements, and a more expensive city government, because of the public buildings here, then we should bear a portion of that expense ourselves.

I have regarded my proposition as perhaps a fair compromise between those who have thought that the whole expense or nearly the whole of it should be borne by the people of the city and the District, and those who think all or nearly all the expense should be borne by the General Government. It will raise perhaps $1,800,000, which is a little more than one-half of the estimated expenses of the District government for the coming fiscal year.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I would prefer to withdraw my amendment for the present, until the House shall determine the rate of taxation that they will fix, whether it shall be one and a half or two dollars per hundred of valuation. When that is done I will then move an amendment to make a distinction between city property and rural property.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] withdraws his amendment, then I will offer mine as an original proposition.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the rate of taxation in the cities of Washington and Georgetown two and a half dollars per hundred. I have before me the report of the auditor of the State of Ohio, submitted to the Legislature of that State a few weeks ago. In it he gives a table of the assessments of forty-five of the principal cities and towns of Ohio, and the rate of taxation in those cities and towns.

The total valuation of property in Ohio is made on its real value in money. That value is sworn to in the first place by the assessors of the State. In the second place the valuation goes before the county or city board of equalization, composed of certain officers, and they are sworn to put the real value in money on all the real estate and all the personal property of the State of Ohio. It then goes before the State board of equalization, and they are likewise sworn to put the real value in money on all the property. Therefore there is every precaution taken to get at the actual value in money of all the property of Ohio.

Now, in the table before me there is a statement of the valuations of forty-five cities and towns, all the cities and a number of the large towns in Ohio. The total valuation of the property in those cities and towns is in round numbers $448,000,000. The average rate of taxation is 25.433 mills per $100, a little over 2½ per cent. on all the town property of the State of Ohio, ascertained by every precaution which the constitution and the law can afford in order to get at its true valuation in money. I have endeavored to find out the rate of taxation in the State of Indiana by examining the report of the auditor of that State.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Does the gentleman say that in Ohio the rate of taxation on town property is 2½ per cent.?

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. On all the property of the towns, real and personal.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. To say nothing of the State tax?

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I speak of the cities' and large towns of Ohio.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. You do not include the State taxes?

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I include all the taxes except special assessments for improvements, &c. I refer to the incorporated towns and cities, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Lima—

Mr. LAWRENCE. And Bellefontaine.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Yes, and Bellefontaine. The auditor of the State of Indiana says that a large portion of the taxes in the towns of that State are not returned to the State auditor, the local taxes of every description pertaining particularly to the municipal corporation. But, notwithstanding he has not those taxes in many instances, the average is there over 2 per cent. And I am told by gentlemen here who live in New England that the rate of taxation there is at least $2\frac{1}{2}$ or 3 per cent. in that part of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COTTON. Mr. Speaker, I think that the tax in the country should be at least $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent. less than the tax in the cities. If the tax in the cities be made 2 per cent., then the tax should be at least as low as $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in the country. As to personal property, the tax upon that should perhaps be uniform. Personal property is regarded in law as following the person. A man may live in the country, may have his property assessed there, and yet may operate with his money or other personal property in the city. I think, therefore, that the proposition to make the tax on personal property in the country the same as in the cities is correct. But in regard to the taxation on real property, I believe there should be a discrimination made between city property and country property. I may give it as my opinion here, outside of the committee-room, that the tax should be about 2 per cent. in the cities and $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in the country. I do not think that the city tax should be higher than 2 per cent., although that is not a very high tax. We pay much more than that all through the West, in some cases 4 and 5 per cent. on the value of the property. But there is already standing against the people of this District, or against most of them, a 3 per cent. tax unpaid; and they ask us to-night to put in this bill an amendment to extend for some months at least the time for paying that old tax, because they are still burdened with that, and now here is a new tax to follow. In view of the taxes now standing against the people in various ways in this District, I think 2 per cent. is as high as we should go upon property in the cities.

I have here a memorial from the people in the country setting forth why they should not be taxed as high as those in the cities. I think they give very good reasons—reasons which we discussed in Committee of the Whole when this bill was under consideration. They urge that the large debt of the District has been contracted mainly for the benefit of the city, in improving the streets, &c., and that the people in the city should be willing to pay a pretty good tax, as their property has been greatly advanced in value by these improvements. They urge also that the expenses for police, for gas, and for the fire department inure peculiarly to the benefit of the city, and it is certainly unjust to tax people in the country to maintain these departments, in the benefits of which they have no share. As it may be desirable to refer to this memorial hereafter, either in this House or in the Senate, I take the liberty to incorporate it as a part of my remarks.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, citizens and tax-payers of the county of Washington outside of the cities of the District of Columbia, respectfully represent to your honorable bodies that the provision in the Morrill bill which proposes to tax the property of the county in future equally with the property of the two cities would do great injustice to and impose great hardship on the tax-payers of the county. To prove this a few facts are here submitted for the consideration of Congress:

First. The county had no debt whatever until the board of public works imposed one on it by the four-million loan; and the share of the many millions of expenditures incurred by the said board in this District which legally and justly belongs to the county to pay scarcely exceeds $100,000, not nearly proportional to its population or property; while in addition to this proportional excess of the cities' liabilities for the debts of the late District government, the old city debts previously incurred amount to several million dollars.

Second. There are many expenditures peculiar to the cities, as for gas, water, paving, sewers, &c., always requiring a much higher rate of taxation therein than in the country.

Third. Nearly all the improved property of the cities is highly productive, realizing generally from 10 per cent. upward per annum upon its valuation, whereas there is very little property in the county which will rent for half that rate, most of it for not more than 3 per cent., and the land generally for not more than 2 per cent. on its assessed value. Two per cent. yearly taxation on the assessment of the lands of the county would utterly ruin all the agricultural and gardening interests of this District.

Fourth. There is an extraordinary amount of exempted property in the county, reaching to several million dollars, and this mostly for the benefit of the cities and of the country at large, and of no special benefit to the county. To enumerate only a part of the property now exempted from taxation, we mention the valuable real estate of the four colleges and universities within its limits, the immense Soldiers' Home property, and that of the Insane Asylum.

Fifth. The actual expenditures yearly for the benefit of the county at the present time amount to less than one dollar on the hundred dollars of our taxable property. And if the United States Government should pay a proper share of the county expenses in lieu of a taxation of Government property located within our limits, and remove unjust exemptions, our yearly expenses would be less than seventy-five cents on the one hundred dollars of our taxable real estate. Seventy-five cents on the dollar was the most ever imposed upon the county prior to the establishment of the District government for general taxation.

We therefore respectfully but earnestly urge your honorable bodies to reduce the maximum rate of taxation in the county to seventy-five cents on the hundred dollars, or set us apart and allow us to pay only our own proper expenses. Besides, we ask you in simple justice to entirely exempt us from taxation for the next fiscal year, as an offset to the excessive tax of 2 per cent. imposed on us the present year, for more than one-half of which we receive no benefit in return.

We also petition your honorable bodies to provide for the appointment of a commission, to be composed equally of citizens of the county and of the cities of the District, to ascertain and settle definitely the past and present financial relations and accounts between the county and the cities, according to justice and laws relating thereto.

Mr. CHIPMAN. It is time, Mr. Speaker, that Congress and the country knew the exact condition of affairs in the District of Columbia, and appreciated the legal and moral obligations resting both upon the country and the District. I shall not probably, except in running debate, again ask the attention of the House upon our local needs and rights, and it seems not improbable that the District will never again be granted a hearing on this floor. I feel therefore that my duty requires me once more to bring the attention of the House to our wants.

DISTRICT INDEBTEDNESS.

There is nothing so important to us as that Congress should know precisely the state of the District indebtedness. I believe I can make this clear.

I lay down this proposition, and believe it to be sound in law and maintainable before the highest judicial tribunal of the country, that the debt of the District of Columbia is not and cannot, upon the basis of past legislation and past liabilities, be greater than $10,000,000. I propose to prove this by incontestable evidence.

The late District government rested on an organic act which no power but that of Congress could contravene. Section 14 of that act provided—

That no debt by which the aggregate debt of the District shall exceed 5 per cent. of the assessed property of the District shall be contracted, unless the law authorizing the same shall at the general election have been submitted to the people and have received a majority of the votes cast for members of the Legislative Assembly at such election.

When the improvement of the District was inaugurated by the four-million loan act of July 10, 1871, its legality was questioned, on the ground that it exceeded the aggregate debt allowed, and ought to be submitted to the people. It was submitted and ratified, and afterward, May 8, 1872, confirmed by act of Congress. But to relieve all doubt as to the meaning of the organic act, Congress provided by that act—

That the debt of the District of Columbia, including the debts of the late corporation, shall at no time exceed the sum of $10,000,000, unless an increase over said amount shall have been previously authorized by act of Congress.

Here were two plain restrictions. As to the first, it is sufficient to say that the people never authorized any loan other than the four-million loan; as to the second, Congress never enlarged the maximum debt, nor did the Legislative Assembly ever exceed the $10,000,000. Whatever liabilities there may now exist, they are not the liabilities of the District, unless authorized by the District Legislature within their legal power to authorize them, or unless Congress previously enlarged the maximum limit. This was never done, and cannot be now done retroactively.

BONDED DEBT OF THE DISTRICT.

The bonded debt of the District authorized by the Legislative Assembly, (see report commissioners, page 7, Executive Document, part 6, second session Forty-third Congress,) is $5,524,600.00; late corporation of Georgetown, $260,189.21; late corporation of Washington, $3,099,151.22; making total $8,883,940.43.

The acts authorizing this debt may be seen by reference to commissioners' report, page 271. This I assert to be the exact funded legal debt of the District of Columbia. (Report, pages 7, 131, 272.)

SEWER TAX.

What further debt or liability is chargeable to the District of Columbia? It may be said that the act of June 26, 1873, "creating drainage and sewerage sections," under which $2,120,000 of sewer certificates were authorized and issued by the board of public works, make a liability of the District. Of these there were redeemed by the District, through the collector of taxes and the sinking-fund commissioners, $1,056,850, which the board of audit hold cannot be funded and cannot be restored to the District. There have been filed and are outstanding, including interest, $1,112,942.29. This might be added to our funded debt and still be within the ten-million limitation, but it was held by eminent counsel as not a debt of the District, but was a lien on property, against which the holder could proceed; besides, our people always contended that the act was illegal, and Congress so determined and repealed it by act of June 20, 1874.

ASSESSMENT CERTIFICATES.

On same day, June 26, 1873, the Legislative Assembly authorized the board of public works to issue certificates of indebtedness for work done and "chargeable to private property benefited thereby." Under this act $2,000,000 were issued. It was objected by citizens to this as to the former act that it was not within the legal power of the Legislative Assembly, as it increased the debt beyond the limit. But learned counsel advised that it was competent for the Legislative Assembly to do this, as it did not create a District liability, the assessments being pledged to pay the certificates. In fact, the assessments were largely in excess of the $2,000,000, and are rapidly paying the certificates, and will leave an excess to go toward paying the general debt of $1,614,054.37. I cannot stop to read the opinion given as to these two acts; it was by Messrs. Caleb Cushing, Jeremiah S. Black, W. E. Chandler, and Walter S. Cox, and will be found at length in Report No. 453, Senate, volume 1, first session Forty-third Congress, page 468. These are substantially all the liabilities incurred by the board of public works with which the District of Columbia was by any pretense legally connected, except such as I will now notice. As to the sewer tax, it was declared illegal by repealing the act; as to the assessment certificates, there are ample funds to pay them from that special fund, and this leaves our debt as I have stated it, $8,883,940.43.

OTHER DISTRICT LIABILITIES.

Among the claims which the board of audit was directed to audit by act of June 20, 1874, were claims evidenced by the certificate of the auditor and certified by the comptroller of the District. These only amounted to $1,897.06. Still another class were claims of class five, arising under oral or written contracts made by or on behalf of the District of Columbia. These claims amount to $482,569.70, of which there have been allowed $82,547.43; disallowed, $96,319. There will probably be in all allowed about $250,000. Another class, (seventh,) damages to real estate, which, growing out of the action of the board, I will group in the list of District liabilities, of which there are in all $468,686.07; allowed, $84,689.57. There may be still further allowed the balance, $383,996.50. Another class, (eighth,) for sewer tax paid by owners of property, amounts to $557,683.52. But this was under the act of the Legislative Assembly afterward repealed by Congress, and is no part of the debt of the District.

Excluding the illegal sewer tax and the certificates of assessment, which are no part of the District debt, and adding all the other claims, many of which were contracted by the board of public works upon doubtful legislative authority, and we have to be added to the funded debt—

Claims class three.....	$1,897 06
Claims class five.....	250,000 00
Claims class seven.....	468,686 07
Add funded debt.....	8,883,943 43

Total funded and floating debt of the District of Columbia..... 9,604,526 55

The actual legal debt of the District ends here. Any other statement of it is forced and unwarranted.

CERTIFICATE OF ASSESSMENT INDEBTEDNESS.

But it is urged that as the Legislative Assembly authorized the certificates of assessment (commonly called greenbacks) the District must provide for them. Grant this. The provision and the only necessary provision is already made for their payment. The receipts from special assessments are pledged to pay them. This account will stand thus:

Due from private property special assessments.....	$3,176,454 37
Outstanding certificates of assessment, (greenbacks).....	1,552,400 00

Balance due the District on account of special assessments.....	1,624,054 37
Add other assets—Chesapeake and Ohio Canal bonds.....	75,000 00
Washington and Alexandria Railroad bonds.....	59,000 00

We have total assets of District to apply to debt..... 1,758,054 37

SEWER-TAX INDEBTEDNESS.

It is also urged that because our Legislature authorized the sewer-tax bonds to issue, therefore the District must provide for them. It would seem idle to contest this, for Congress declared the act illegal, and repealed it. But it may be added, and still our assets will pay it and leave a small balance. Thus:

Sewer-tax certificates, including interest, (class one).....	$1,112,942 29
Sewer tax paid by property owners, (class seven).....	557,686 52

Total.....	1,670,628 81
Assets already shown.....	1,758,054 37
Balance to be applied to our funded debt.....	77,425 56

I have charged the District with everything which by any pretense is justly or in my opinion legally chargeable to it; and allowing credit for assets, we have the debt about nine and a half millions.

In this I include, but do not concede, nearly $2,000,000 sewer tax, which has no warrant of law and which I do not believe it competent for Congress to compel the people to pay; and I have included the certificates of assessment, which are chargeable to and payable by individual property-holders.

LIABILITIES OF THE UNITED STATES.

I come now to the more important question who are liable for the remaining indebtedness, for we have reached but a part. I claim that the United States are legally and morally liable. Who created these liabilities? The board of public works. Under what authority? Let us see.

I have shown negatively that they derived no authority from the District Legislature or the people; and as to the District, any liability created without such authority is void.

After the board had exhausted the $4,000,000 loan, the proceeds of special assessments, and temporary aid given by the Legislative Assembly, they still found themselves in the presence of an unsolved problem of improvements. They obtained authority from the Legislative Assembly, by acts of August 10, 1871, and May 23, 1873, to assess one-third of the cost of improvements against private property benefited as provided by the organic act; but the Legislature could not and did not attempt to provide for the other two-thirds. Our general fund was exhausted and our limit of $10,000,000 debt reached and our taxes up to the maximum of 2 per cent., which was barely sufficient to pay the current expenses of government and the interest on our debt. The Legislature, therefore, could, not if they would, incur a liability for this two-thirds cost.

Here is the dividing line between these liabilities. The Legislature had started this general fund from which the two-thirds of the cost should be paid by the $4,000,000 loan act, but they provided distinctly, (section 2, act July 10, 1871,) "that in no case shall the board of public works enter into any contract for any work which shall exceed the estimate" on which the loan act was based. Besides the organic act, section 37 stood as a protection to the District, and still stands:

The said board shall have no power to make contracts to bind said District to the payment of any sums of money, except in pursuance of appropriation made by law, and not until such appropriations shall have been made.

The act of Congress of May 8, 1871, said:

The debt of the District of Columbia * * shall at no time exceed the sum of $10,000,000, unless an increase * * shall have been previously authorized by act of Congress.

And the same act also said:

The aggregate amount of taxes in any one year, excepting such additional assessments as may be made for improvements specially authorized by law, shall not exceed 2 per cent. on the assessed cash valuation of property in said city.

The bars were put up in every direction, and they have never been taken down so far as the District is concerned.

The District stands upon the statute law, and disclaims all liability in violation of it. (See report of Joint Investigating Committee, page 7.)

Now, who were this board? They were the agents of the United States; they were paid by them; appointed by them; to them they reported, and to them alone were they answerable. Who can gainsay this?

The organic act, section 37, gave to this board entire control of all the streets, avenues, and alleys in the District. They were Government officers in every sense, and have been so held to be by the courts. This is important, and I do not want any doubt indulged as to my proposition. The supreme court of this District decided, after a full argument, this exact question in Barnes vs. The United States, and other cases.

I read enough to show the decision:

Barnes sued the District of Columbia for damages arising from an injury by falling down an embankment in one of the streets excavated by the board of public works. In commenting upon the control over the streets given by the organic act to the board of public works, the court say:

After entire control of any subject or matter is given to one person or to a board, what kind of control can be implied, by way of reversion or remainder in the District, to some other person or body.

It is said the board of public works is a constituent part of the District government as last organized; and therefore, on any omission of duty by any constituent part of such government, whereby damage has been occasioned to third persons, an action may be maintained by such persons against the District government. This position is rather specious than sound.

Congress saw fit to create the board of public works as well as the board of health in the same act; but this does not satisfy the separate duties or functions of each. The truth is, each is a distinct part of the agency of the United States for the government of the District, and duties and responsibilities must be determined accordingly.

The members of the board of public works are appointed by the President, confirmed by the Senate, paid by the United States; and being thus appointed, to them is committed the control and repair of the streets. It would be as much a trespass to interfere with their prescribed duties as with those of any other agents of the United States.

But it is proposed to hold this government responsible for the negligence of the board of public works created by Congress, * * over which the people of this District have no more control than the people of a neighboring State. This is running the doctrine of imputed sins so far into the ground that I am unwilling to follow it.—Opinion of Mr. Justice Olin.

Here is the precise question decided. How can an action be maintained against this District for a liability created by your agents over whom we had no more control than the people of the State of Maryland had?

The District Legislature could aid the board by appropriations, but it could in no way interfere with its control of the streets; it could create a debt or make appropriations within certain limits to provide funds for this board, but it could not prevent the board from paving all the streets with most costly material or do any other thing. Congress alone could control this. Where, then, did authority come from, and to whom did the board look in improving streets with authority only to levy tax for one-third the cost upon the property benefited? I will let the joint investigating committee of last Congress answer. They say:

Your committee are unable to see but one way in which the board could have expected to pay this large debt: that is by receiving aid from Congress, as it must have occurred to them that the resources of the District could not be taxed sufficiently to pay them. Page 14.

It is not my duty to defend the board or to state their theory of action; they have done their work, and are content to abide the verdict of history as to its wisdom and its value. I am speaking for the people of the District, to show that they did not do this thing. They did their share and will pay their share, but they will not and cannot do more.

But did this board reckon without its host? Had they a right to look to Congress? Was their action unprecedented?

Upon this point I cite from the opinion of Hon. C. Cushing, pages 475, 476 of report of Joint Investigating Committee. It states the whole case. I hope members will read it entire. I can only summarize it.

The question was submitted to Mr. Cushing whether the board could go on increasing liabilities in the face of the act of January 8, 1873, prohibiting it unless appropriations were previously made.

Mr. Cushing held that the act of March 3, 1873, repealed this restriction, and left the matter to come up as deficiencies. He showed how impossible it would be for the board to delay work devolved upon them by paving half a street and leaving the other half unpaved, or half laying a sewer, and the like. He discussed the double relation of agent of the District and agent of the United States conferred upon the board, and advised that it was competent for it to do the very thing which ultimately brought disaster and created the very liabilities I now insist are not ours, but yours. I refer to this to show that this board were not acting beyond the color of authority.

I need not remind the House that Mr. Cushing enjoys the reputation of both a statesman and good lawyer. Few men in this country have had so wide a range of experience in public affairs. He states the theory on which the board acted. Whether it is sound in law or not is your affair, not mine. The action of Congress would indicate that it is sound. Congress continued to appropriate money from time to time, and when the crash came and the board was destroyed, Congress appropriated over a million more, and provided for funding all the liabilities of the District and the board.

In this act of June 20, 1874, I find legislative interpretation, as I claim, of my proposition. The act makes a distinction between District debt and board of public works liabilities. The theory of the report of the committee and the bill is that the United States are liable, and a guarantee is pledged to pay the bonds. The committee avoid, and the act avoids, deciding this question; but there can be no doubt of the meaning of both. You may call them District of Columbia bonds or Alaska bonds; they remain the bonds of the United States, given to discharge a liability of the United States, a liability which had no sanction of our Legislative Assembly, and cannot now be declared our obligations without violating every congressional safeguard thrown around our property and our citizens.

In this matter the board of public works stood in the exact relation that General Babcock or the Supervising Architect, Mr. Mullett, stood in conducting recent public work. Congress could with the same legal right impose a tax on our property to pay one of Mr. Mullett's deficiencies or General Babcock's excess of expenditures on a public square, if he ever makes any, as to tax us for work done around the public buildings and squares by the board of public works without our authority. The acts of the board as the agents of the United States were public acts, and the United States cannot escape the consequences. How can we be taxed directly, to the exclusion of all the rest of the United States, to pay the debt of the United States?

I submit that it cannot be done, and this opinion is the law laid down by your Judiciary Committee at the last session in the report submitted by Judge POLAND, (see Report No. 627, second session Forty-third Congress,) and is, as I understand it, the exact theory of the report and bill submitted by the joint committee appointed under the act of June 20, 1874. (See report No. 479, second session Forty-third Congress.)

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to protract the argument on this point. I think it established. We come to the practical question, what is to be done about it? How much of this liability must the United States assume? I say the United States should at least assume the entire 3.65 loan, as a matter of law, of equity, and of necessity. These views I will notice briefly. I have already noticed the legal argument.

THE LAW OF THE CASE.

First. Of the classes of claims authorized by the act of June 20 to be funded, the act expressly designates as liabilities of the board the first, second, fourth, sixth, and eighth classes. These include the sewer tax, which Congress declared illegal, and other claims that find no warrant of authority in any legislative enactment of the District. They are:

First class, claims against the board of public works, evidenced by sewer certificates, under act of Legislature, afterward repealed by Congress	$1,113,942 29
Second class, claims against the board of public works, evidenced by certificate of their auditor	4,484,144 52
Fourth class, claims for which no evidence of indebtedness has been issued, arising out of contracts, written or oral, of board of public works	2,896,537 78
Sixth class, claims for private property taken by board of public works from the streets and alleys	463,004 85
Eighth class, claims for sewer tax paid by persons; same as class first	557,688 52
	9,514,407 96

It is not possible to make an exact division of the District and Government liabilities; but no just division of the expenditures of the last three years, upon the theory I have advanced of the Government liability for all acts of the board not authorized by the Legislative Assembly can be made which will not require the United States to pay at least $10,000,000.

This may not be an agreeable view to Congress, but it is the true view, and must be taken sooner or later. It is your work; your agents did it; you stood by and encouraged it. It will not do to turn now and cast the burden upon the oppressed people of this District.

THE EQUITY OF THE CASE.

Second. As a matter of equity I say the United States should not only assume these 3.65 bonds, but should pay one-half of the expenses of this District since the capital was located here. There never has been a time since the permanent establishment of the capital that any fair apportionment of local expenses would not require the United States to pay at least one-half.

In a speech last winter (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Appendix, p. 113) I endeavored to carefully define the legal and equitable relations of the District with the National Government, and to trace the history of both in this regard. I think I demonstrated that the United States should pay at least one-half of the cost of the local government, and I based that belief on principle and upon recognized precedent. I cannot now repeat the argument, but I believe a careful perusal of it and of the facts upon which it rests will convince any unprejudiced mind.

I cite the argument there elaborated, and particularly the following:

Report of Senator Southard, February 2, 1835, to the Senate.
Report of Senator Brown, May 15, 1858, to the Senate.

Report of the House Committee on the District of Columbia, No. 72, second session Forty-second Congress, May 13, 1872.

Report of Judiciary Committee of the House, No. 627, first session Forty-third Congress, 1874.

Report of the Joint Committee of Senate and House, No. 479, second session Forty-third Congress, December 7, 1874.

This proposition assumed, what is the state of the account? I could present an approximate table showing within a hundred thousand dollars the amount due from the United States. It would show the expenditures of all kinds made by local and General Government for purposes which may be regarded on common account. It would bring the United States in debt to the District of Columbia not far from $15,000,000.

But I will not pursue this in detail. We have got to that point in the District where Congress must repudiate a part of the debt or assume it, for we cannot pay it; and Congress must make up its mind further to provide for a large proportion of the cost of local government, for we cannot pay it all; and in this view it may not be material to strike a balance-sheet. You can get a certain revenue from our property, but it is limited and the balance must come from the Treasury.

I state this frankly, and to those who take a proper pride in the capital and are disposed to accept the duty devolved upon you by the Constitution, it cannot be disagreeable. In any event it is best for us all that the exact truth be known.

THE NECESSITY OF THE CASE.

This leads me to present, finally, the argument of necessity. There is a point beyond which a people sometimes cannot go and cannot be driven. The citizens of this District have arrived at that point now. They can and will pay a reasonable tax upon their property; but they cannot and will not do more. You may seize and confiscate, or you may become possessed of their property by sale under the marshal's hammer; but you cannot enforce a tax large enough to support this District government in all its branches and provide for the payment of all the liabilities existing here.

If our property were assessed to-day, excluding the usual exempt class, the cash value would not reach $75,000,000. It has been inflated to ninety odd millions; but times are changed; real property is greatly depressed, and has scarcely any sale.

Aside from real estate we have but little property or business from which revenue can be derived, and, compared with most other cities, really nothing. All attempts heretofore to assess personal estate have been delusive and disappointing, and have scarcely paid the cost of collection.

Assuming that our real property could be justly assessed to $90,000,000, we have a basis of calculation which is the most favorable.

The commissioners for the District estimate the necessary expenses for the ensuing year, (see Miscellaneous Documents, No. 40, House of Representatives, second session Forty-third Congress,) $2,755,800. This is exclusive of the interest on the 3.65 bonds and exclusive of a sinking fund to retire the whole debt. Add these two items, and we have (estimated) $750,000; total revenue required, $3,505,800.

To raise this by tax upon our property would require us to pay four dollars on every hundred, and this cannot be paid by our people under the circumstances.

The extraordinary tax of 3 per cent. levied by act of June 20, 1874, when the commissioners made their report to Congress, (page 53.) was delinquent to the amount of	$1,607,216 04
And on the prior levy of 2 per cent. under the Legislature, (estimated)	500,000 00
On other levies	150,000 00

Making a total of delinquent tax	2,257,216 04
To this must be added special taxes against private property, still uncollected	3,176,454 37

Which makes still to be paid by our citizens, and which hangs over all the property, the sum of

5,433,670 41

The most of this must be provided for while we are paying our next year's tax, which, I submit, it is not possible for us to do.

But in this connection it is due our citizens that Congress should know what extraordinary sums have been paid by them in furtherance of improvements and to maintain our local government in the past three years. We have actually paid in money since the 1st of June, 1871, when the new government began, exclusive of the debt bonded and floating, over $5,000,000; which, added to the delinquent tax and special assessments unpaid, $5,433,670.41, makes the total of $10,433,670.41; add to this the amount of the liabilities funded, floating, and unpaid, $18,427,360.24, and we have $28,861,030.15, which is equal to nearly one-third of the entire taxable real estate of the District.

May I not conclude the argument here? Can any member look this subject squarely in the face and vote to cast upon this people the entire burden of government in this District? If there is, I warn him to provide liberally for the officers of the law, for upon them will devolve the disagreeable duty of dispossessing half the resident population of this capital. In this course of cruelty there is but one measure of refinement necessary. Make the non-payment of tax cause for imprisonment; we will at least secure shelter at public expense.

A GRAVE RESPONSIBILITY SOMEWHERE.

I have pursued this question, Mr. Speaker, as far as I propose to do. I know there are those on this floor who assert that the United States should do nothing more toward sustaining local government here than in any other city of the Union; who say you should do nothing to support the schools, when one-third of the pupils are children of non-residents, who are the public servants of the United States and obliged to live here, but contribute little or nothing to taxes; who say you should not help the fire department, when here the United States have more valuable treasures exposed in inflammable buildings than the whole population besides; who say that the police department should not be aided, when your own lives and property, and that of thousands compelled to come here and transact business depend on the efficiency of this corps; who say that the health department should not be assisted, when but for its efficient work of last year and the help you gave Congress would have been driven out of the capital to escape the scourge of small-pox; who say that you should not pay anything toward lighting the streets, when it would be next to impossible to transact the public business and would be unsafe to venture beyond your houses but for this public convenience; who say you should not help pave, sewer, and otherwise improve and adorn the city, when you have laid off a capital here upon a plan which implied and brought with it the pledge that you would do these things at your own expense, and unless you do them they must be undone and your city cease to be possible as your capital. It is to those, and such as those, who believe all these monstrous errors, that I present the District of Columbia naked and prostrate and almost hopeless.

I have laid our burden at your feet and I declare to you, not defiantly, but earnestly, that we will not, because we cannot, take it up unless you assist us. I have striven for four years to impress upon Congress the necessity for some intelligent and declared purpose toward this District, and my only hope now is that between the despotism set up last session and the anarchy we seem drifting to, Congress will soon wake up to the fact that here at the nation's center; here where we should have a model government; here where by common consent and with a common pride a generous and liberal policy should govern; here of all the broad domain of the United States is the most vacillating, the most uncertain, the most ignorant, and the most unpatriotic course pursued.

I have not uttered since I have had the honor of being among you one word of partisan appeal, for I have felt that while I was sent here upon the nomination of one of the great parties of the country, it was to serve interests purely local and in behalf of which there should be no party dispute; but it is a disappointing reflection that that party with which most of my constituents are in sympathy, however much it may have done to beautify this city, has destroyed the only government we had and has not given us a better one; that while in spasms of good feeling it has appropriated generously, it has, under cover of this duty performed, wholly overlooked the greater one of providing here a wise, an efficient, a model government. There is a grave responsibility somewhere, and I hope there may yet be patriotism and national pride enough to perform it.

While you are agonizing over States which are provided by the Constitution with machinery to operate themselves, I beg of you not to forget the heart of the nation, that cannot even pulsate without you will let it. I beg of you do not longer draggle this "child of the Union" at the heels of Neglect; I beg of you do not forget that this entire community, as large as some of your States, is practically existing under a despotism, which, if it chose to avail itself of the power you have given it and were not composed of men every way to be trusted, as our present commissioners can be, might oppress this people to a point that would bring personal disgrace upon every one of you and indelibly tarnish the very name of American liberty.

I declare my deliberate opinion to be that there is not within the range of my knowledge of Christian nations a spot so badly governed as this one, where Congress alone has absolute and exclusive legislative control. Taking the government of the District of Columbia as an example of the wisdom of Congress, this nation could not exist twenty-four hours, if it were not for the reserved rights of the States which secure to them good government.

It is impossible, Mr. Speaker, for me to say more or do more than I have done to arouse Congress to a sense of duty toward the capital of this great nation. In common with the citizens of this District, I have urged the local needs; I have urged the national view; I have worked in season and out of season, and must we now only sit down in utter despair and wait the final consummation of our ruin?

Mr. RANDALL. In the early part of this session I commented upon that portion of the President's message relating to the debt of this District. At that time I stated that the President's declaration as to the amount of the debt of this District, to wit, about $15,000,000, in his message was an error. I stated then that I believed the debt of this District was more than $20,000,000; and now, in reply to the gentleman from the District, I propose to show that the aggregate debt of the District is $22,486,484.11.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Let me ask the gentleman when he speaks of the debt of the District does he mean—

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will see exactly what I mean if he will listen. The following is a statement of the debt of the District on the 1st December, 1874:

Statement of District debt December 1, 1874.

Amount of bonded debt (exclusive assessment certificates) authorized.....	$10,027,640 43

Chesapeake and Ohio Canal bonds with sinking-fund commissioners.....	75,000 00
Net total.....	22,486,484 11
Washington and Alexandria Railroad bonds, $59,000, are in litigation, bring no income; in fact, the District paid last year under a decree of the court $19,160 for similar bonds guaranteed by Washington City.

And I wish now to show that even this is not the entire burden. There are the following additional burdens upon the real estate of the District, as per official reports:

Uncollected taxes before 1873.....	$150,000 00
Uncollected taxes for fiscal year 1873-74.....	500,000 00
Uncollected taxes for fiscal year 1874-75.....	1,607,216 04
Total.....	2,257,216 04

I wish to have these statements stand side by side in the RECORD.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I move to strike out the last word, and yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] if he desires it.

Mr. RANDALL. It has been shown by other parties that the debt is more than $26,000,000. I want to see the commissioners continued and the board of audit continued for perhaps twelve months. I believe it is the only avenue out of the distress which has been heaped upon the property-holders of this city by the gross mismanagement of the board of public works. And I believe that whenever that shall have been sifted to the bottom, when Mr. Magruder's accounts, which have been most outrageously, if not dishonestly kept, shall have been examined, it will be shown that property here is burdened with more than $25,000,000 of debt upon an assessment of real estate less than $100,000,000. I stand here, one at least, ready to give all the help I can to these people here from the Federal Government. But I want first to be assured that the money which we give will be honestly expended, and for the purposes for which it is appropriated. [Applause in the galleries.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If any further manifestation of applause is made, the galleries will be instantly cleared.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I have only a word to add. I am obliged to the galleries for this applause, for I understand it to be in response to the sentiment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that he is going to help this District all he can.

Mr. RANDALL. Property here will all be made almost valueless if we do not extend such aid.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Now, with regard to the assault on the personnel of this government, I shall not attempt any defense. The administration of those officers is a part of the history of the past, and their acts will answer for themselves in the future.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will observe that I spoke of them as public officers.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Speaking of them as public officers—speaking of this board of public works and the individual members of it—I say it ought to be remembered that in this Congress they have each and all been investigated over and over again; and no committee of this House or the Senate ever found one act of corruption on the part of a single member of that board or that government. After so many investigations I should think that gentlemen would not be hasty in charging fraud and corruption upon that board.

Now the gentleman strikes the right key when he says that this District is in great distress. I do not regard that as the fault of the people of this District. They were generous in giving their authority—

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Whose fault was it? Will the gentleman please tell us?

Mr. CHIPMAN. It was the fault of Congress.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Was it Congress that did these things from which the people are suffering, or was it these men whom the gentleman has been eulogizing on this floor?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I will be perfectly frank with the gentleman. I have never concealed anything from the House or from the people of the District. The fault lies right here. It lies partly at the door of the gentleman himself. After perhaps five months, certainly three months, of patient investigation, he came in here and submitted—what? A proposition which turned this community over, bound hand and foot to a despotism, a power ten times as absolute as the board of public works.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. What "despotism" does the gentleman allude to?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I refer to the despotism of the board of commissioners. So far as regards the personnel of that board—so long as the positions are filled by the gentlemen who now occupy them—I have no doubt that the duties will be performed faithfully. But I believe that the act of June 20, 1874, confers greater power upon this board of commissioners than was ever conferred upon any officers in our District government. You have deprived the people of any power to control their own affairs.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Has that board of commissioners added anything to the burdens of the city?

Mr. CHIPMAN. No; and I do not know that they ever will. I am speaking now of the frame of government which you have given us, which is certainly a pure despotism.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Who was it but the governor and the board of public works that appointed all this army of officers to eat out the substance of the people of this District?

Mr. CHIPMAN. This "army of officers" was a necessary result of the system of improvements. It was impossible to expend $15,000,000 here in two years without an "army of officers" and employes.

Mr. RANDALL. Allow me one question: Who made all these contracts without any meeting of the board of public works?

Mr. CHIPMAN. Why, sir, the board of public works made those contracts precisely as less than a quorum of this House often does business.

Mr. Speaker, on that point I desire to say this only. It is idle and a waste of time to defend what is in the past. All we desire of Congress is that it shall do its duty. Congress stood by here and saw this work go on. The people gave their assent to a part of it, but they did not give their assent to all of it. Learned counsel for the board of public works (and their opinion is in the report the gentleman from Indiana submitted to the House)—they gave it as their opinion as counsel of the board of public works that that board was violating no law when it anticipated the improvements by incurring a debt for the other two-thirds about which I spoke a moment ago. Mr. Cushing was one of those gentlemen; Mr. Jeremiah S. Black was another; Mr. W. E. Chandler another; Mr. Walter S. Cox, of this city, another; and there was another gentleman whose name does not occur to me just now.

Mr. W. R. ROBERTS. Were they not paid for their opinion?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I am sure I do not know. Attorneys are in the habit of being paid for their services.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Was not the first fault with Congress in delegating to another the power which under the Constitution belonged to it alone?

Mr. CHIPMAN. That is possible. It is true Congress has never exercised any intelligent control over this District. It is not doing it now. The gentleman from Indiana and his committee asked Congress to appoint a committee, and Congress did it; but that committee has reported no bill to become a law at this session.

I have no wish to detain the House on this subject. All we want is that you will lay a fair tax on our people and pay the rest yourself, as in justice you ought to do.

Mr. MERRIAM. The gentleman withdraws the amendment, and I renew it.

Mr. Speaker, no representative of the people can have stood in this Congress for the last two or four years without having come to the conclusion that the citizens of the District of Columbia have lacked the pluck and courage, the self-reliance and self-support which characterize the Anglo-Saxon race outside of this District. I have never been able to understand why the people outside of this District in the rural part of the country should be taxed to support the people of this District in luxury while they themselves are not willing to do a fair proportion of the work of self-support.

The Delegate of this District, whom I admire because he always defends well every good or bad cause in this District, although this is the first time I ever heard him, says there are despots here. We in the city of New York have had despots, and from the year 1860 to the year 1870 were taxed at an average for the ten years of \$2.31 $\frac{1}{10}$; that was before the ring despots had sway; and since the ring was broken, (which saddled us with a debt larger in proportion than the citizens of this District are saddled with to-day,) we have been obliged to come up like men and meet it. And we are now taxed over 3 per cent. upon our real estate upon an assessment that is higher than any assessment ever made in the District of Columbia.

I wish to say to the people of this District that they must cease to rely on Uncle Samuel. They must themselves go to work and pay their taxes and get out of debt if they wish prosperity and happiness.

The Delegate has told us there are no manufactories in this District, and hence the people here cannot be expected to support themselves. Why, sir, there is no population in any manufacturing district in the United States where the same ratio of men are paid so much as the people in this District are paid; and it is a sure pay, because it comes out of the Treasury of the United States. More than one-tenth of the people here receive pay from the Treasury of the United States, and larger pay, too, than is paid by any manufacturers in the world.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. I will take the floor and yield five minutes to my colleague.

Mr. COTTON. Let us have a vote.

Mr. MERRIAM. I withdraw the amendment which my colleague renews, and he yields his time to me.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will take the floor and let the gentleman have my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has been heard in opposition, and his time has expired. The gentleman from Iowa objects to the withdrawal of the amendment.

Mr. MERRIAM. I ask to have three minutes.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object; and will give the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I rise for the purpose of opposing the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. COTTON. I call for a vote.

The question recurred on the amendment originally moved by Mr. SMITH, of Ohio, to the amendment of Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont; and it was rejected.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move pro forma to strike out the last word of the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I feel, I suppose, as every gentleman has felt who has ever served upon the District Committee, the thankless task imposed when called upon to defend or advocate anything pertaining to the interest of the people of the District of Columbia. Not by any procurement, or desire of mine I have happened to be on the District of Columbia Committee for the last four years, and I think I am somewhat familiar and acquainted with its affairs and interests; I think I understand something of the situation and condition of the people here, and certainly something in regard to their business and property.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is how much should this people and property be taxed. Situated as they are, in the condition in which they are placed, circumscribed just as everything here now is, what taxation ought to be imposed upon them. That is the real question and the only one now to be considered. The District of Columbia is absolutely under the control of Congress. Every interest and every right of the people of the enjoyment of their lives, persons, and property are absolutely in our hands and liable to be disposed of almost entirely as we see fit. They cannot do anything affecting or relating to the government of the District or any municipality therein without the consent and authority of Congress. They have no right to make or improve a street, an avenue, or an alley; they cannot even put up or repair a lamp-post, build a sewer, or a sidewalk, or do any the smallest municipal act without Congress shall authorize it to be done.

When I came first to Congress the people here had a municipal government—they were permitted in some measure to govern themselves and control their own local affairs. But Congress in its wisdom or unwisdom stepped in and changed all these things. It made a new government for them and placed all their principal governmental affairs in the hands of men appointed by the Federal power. It left the people scarcely the form of local, much less self-government. Not satisfied with that government, the sole work and creation of the law of Congress, it intervened again and took away every vestige and pretense of a people's government, and placed them and all they are and have or can expect to have in the hands and control of non-resident appointees of the Federal Government. And let me say, on my own behalf, all these changes were made without any act or vote of mine and against my judgment. But whatever the people of the District are now suffering or enjoying in the way of government, whatever burdens now weigh upon or oppress them, whatever wrongs have been committed or whatever good things may have been done, whatever of taxes or assessments may have been piled up against the District, and whether or not they have been wisely and judiciously expended or recklessly and wantonly wasted, all, all has been done or permitted by the laws and authority and under the government imposed upon this people by Congress—and Congress or the Federal Government is solely responsible for it.

Now, the question raised is only the question of how much more taxes these people shall pay. Congress by its law of last session imposed a tax of 3 per cent. upon the then assessed valuation of real estate. The District authorities, by permission of Congress, imposed previously during the same twelve months, upon the same assessment, 2 per cent.; making 5 per cent. in one year. There is, I am informed, more than $1,300,000 of this 3 per cent. tax now unpaid and delinquent; and more than $300,000 of previous levies also delinquent, making in the District more than $2,000,000 of unpaid and delinquent taxes now outstanding and remaining a lien upon the real estate, upon the houses and homes of this people. And all this, too, in addition to a large sum of special or improvement assessments upon particular properties now advertised for sale for non-payment. This is a hasty and only a partial statement of their condition.

Now, sir, as statesmen, impartial and unprejudiced legislators, looking to the interests as well as the condition of this people whose destiny is in our hands, we should endeavor to adjust this tax and levy upon them no more than they can justly bear. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] says that the people of his State are taxed at the rate of $3.50 or little more on the $100. I cannot believe the assessment is at its full valuation if that be the case, or that it is as high a rate as property is assessed in the District. I do not believe there is a State in this Union whose people are obliged to pay $3.50 on each $100 of its actual cash value, unless indeed it may be the poor tax-cursed, crushed, and ruined States of the South, and I doubt if many of them are taxed to that extent.

Mr. SYPHER. I desire to say to the gentleman that taxation in Louisiana is 14½ mills on the $100.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not want to hear from the gentleman from Louisiana. That people have suffered enough from his sort.

And now the question is, what amount of taxes can and ought the people of this District to pay, considering the amount paid during the last year and the amount now delinquent and still to be paid of the previous assessments? Let it be remembered that we are not appropriating any money by this bill; we are not providing for any particular fund or the payment of any particular debt, improvement, or other thing, but devising means to raise money for the Treasury of the United States by a tax upon the people and property of the District of Columbia.

Under our law as it now exists the money raised by such taxes will go into the United States Treasury. And for what purpose? Not to enable these people to govern themselves and manage their own affairs, but to furnish money for the United States to govern, manage, and control the affairs and people of the District. This measure has no relation to the late board of public works or to what they did or what they did not do. They must be judged (as I have no doubt they are willing) by what they have accomplished, and stand or fall by what they have created.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] told us he stood ready to give all the help he could to these people from the Federal Government. But he said:

I want to be first assured that the money which we give will be honestly expended and for the purposes for which it is appropriated.

I have said whatever money we shall raise by this proposed taxation must, according to law, be covered into the Treasury of the United States. What other assurance does the gentleman want that the money will be honestly expended and for legitimate purposes? It can only be drawn by the authorities we shall authorize or appoint. And if it be not honestly and legitimately used it will be only the fault of Congress.

Whatever money we raise by this bill will be, as the people and their affairs and the affairs of the whole District are, in the absolute power and control of Congress. It will be used and disbursed just as Congress shall say; the people can have nothing to say about it; it will be a forced contribution from the people to help the United States pay the expense of ruling and governing them. It may be used to crush and destroy the people, to further oppress and burden them. It may be applied to that, or it may be wholly diverted from the District and used for other purposes.

The right and power of self-government have been taken away from this people altogether. They are hereafter to be forced to pay taxes without any voice in raising them or anything to do with the moneys so collected. It will be emphatically the old exaction against which our fathers rebelled of "taxation without representation." It ought to be enough to satisfy the most inveterate haters of the District that this people are made to pay the expense of Congress "lording it over them." There is nowhere in any country or in any land a more complete despotism than the government and power which Congress has set up in the District of Columbia. The committee, recognizing the power of Congress to tax the people here, considered the subject only in the light of what would be a proper and just tax, and they came to the conclusion that $1.50 on the $100 was all they ought to be required to pay; and my own opinion is that it is all they can pay without greatly distressing them. A much greater rate of taxation will be a virtual confiscation of much of the real estate of the District.

Mr. SPEER obtained the floor and yielded to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MERRIAM.]

Mr. MERRIAM. I have nearly finished what I wish to say. We have in the city of New York Government buildings, post-offices, custom-houses, assay offices belonging to the Government of the United States. And yet we do not ask the United States to educate our children; we do not ask the United States to pave our streets; we do not ask the United States to buy and pay for our court-houses. But here in the District of Columbia the Government of the United States is expected to do everything for the people here, and we outside of the District in the country are to be taxed to pay for it.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman a moment. Do you know how much the United States has appropriated here for the expenses of the District since the Government was founded here?

Mr. MERRIAM. Immense sums are found in every appropriation bill.

Mr. CHIPMAN. It is about $4,500,000, against which the people of the District have expended over $26,000,000.

Mr. MERRIAM. For what purpose have they expended over $26,000,000?

Mr. CHIPMAN. For protecting the Government of the United States in its residence here in Washington.

Mr. MERRIAM. Ah, they have; how?

Mr. CHIPMAN. Giving you a fire department, giving you police, giving your children schools. Over one-third of the children in our public schools to-day are the children of persons who have no more interest in this District government than has the gentleman from New York. Many members of Congress, I am glad to say it, avail themselves of our public schools. I ask pardon of the gentleman for interrupting him.

Mr. MERRIAM. Then I am to understand that the citizens of this District expect the Government to educate their children. It is evident to any one who has been here in these halls that whatever can be wrung out of the Government of the United States is wrung by the citizens of this District. We owned half of the court-house here, and last year we made an appropriation to buy the balance of it, and we paid for it. Yet it is used by the people of this District to-day as it was before. I understand that it is proposed we shall buy the old jail here. I am only surprised that the Government of the United States have not been called upon to buy their front yards, and I suppose the time is not far distant when we will be asked to buy their back yards, because whatever we own they do not pay taxes on, and they can use it as well after we have bought it as before.

The debt of this District to-day, I think, if footed up correctly, would be found to be over $26,000,000. Now, it is very evident to impartial minds that the people of the District cannot pay the whole interest on that debt. We are obligated to pay a portion of it, but what I desire is that the citizens of this District shall come up like honest, bold, brave men, and not shirk from paying at least a fair proportion of it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COTTON. I must insist upon moving the previous question very speedily.

Mr. FORT. I desire to offer a substitute for this first section.

The Clerk read the proposed substitute, as follows:

That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, there shall be levied upon all real and personal property within the limits of the city of Washington, $2 on each $100 of the cash value thereof, and within the limits of the city of Georgetown, $1.50 on each $100 of the cash value thereof; and within said District outside of said cities $1 on each $100 of the cash value thereof, excepting the property of the United States and such other property as is hereinafter exempted from taxation.

Mr. FORT. It occurs to me that the taxes should be graded. Those residing in the city of Washington should pay a much larger tax than those residing in the city of Georgetown, and those residing in the city of Georgetown should pay a greater tax than the farming community outside of the two cities. In my judgment $1 on $100 of the cash value of farm property is all the tax that ought to be paid on farm property. The people residing in this city enjoy more of the benefits and pleasures of these splendid improvements than those living in the country. The greater burden of taxation should be borne by the people living within the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown.

I have nothing to say in reply to my friend from this District [Mr. CHIPMAN] in his claim that the United States ought to pay most of the expenses of the Government, because a few members of Congress temporarily resident here happen to send their children to the public schools. For my part I have not been able to learn of a single member of Congress who has sent his children to a public school here in Washington. There may be one or two who do, but I am not advised of a single instance.

Mr. CHIPMAN. If the gentleman will allow me—

Mr. FORT. May be there are some members who have done so; I have no doubt some of them have sent a scholar to school a short time while they were here attending upon the session of Congress. But in my opinion they have been requested by the school authorities to send their children to school in order to thus be able to make some claim on Congress to appropriate liberally for the support of their schools. Members of Congress do not reside here; they have no right to send their children to school here. They should pay the tuition of their children as other non-residents do.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman know any member of Congress who sends his children to the public schools in this District?

Mr. FORT. I have said that I do not know of any one. Not a single instance do I know of; I do not send to the public school myself. I never thought of doing so without paying tuition as other people do.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not believe there is one. I have children, and I do not send them to the public schools here.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If there are some members who send their children to the public schools here, does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] say that they have sent them there in the way of accepting a bribe? That is a very light charge to make against gentlemen.

Mr. FORT. I do not make that charge. I have said I know of no such case; and I cannot understand why a member of Congress should think of sending his children to school here free.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is a very poor argument.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to say that I do not speak particularly with reference to members of Congress. There may be very few of them who do this; but the point I make is—

Mr. FORT. I cannot yield to the gentleman any longer.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I want the gentleman to answer my point, which is this—

Mr. FORT. I do not object to any children going to school whether they belong to members of Congress or to anybody else; but members of Congress can pay the tuition of their children.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Nor do we.

Mr. FORT. But I do say that members of Congress can afford to pay for the tuition of their children. It is humiliating to hear the gentleman get up here and claim that we must not levy much tax upon the people of this District, but that the United States should pay most of the expenses for the reason that the children of a few members of Congress may occasionally go to school in this city. Sir, I scout any such idea. I do not believe that such a consideration should have any influence. I do not believe that you should tax the people of the United States outside of this District in order to pay for the tuition of the children of any member of Congress while he is temporarily residing here. There is something strange about this argument. There are a great many members of Congress who seem to have their permanent residences here, at least they seem to be very much interested in having the United States pay all the expenses of this District.

For my part I am willing that the Government should make liberal appropriation to pay a portion of the expenses of this District, but I likewise think that the people who live here or own property ought to pay something toward it. They ought to pay a tax on their personal property as the other people of this country do. The expenses of this District fall very heavily upon the people of my district, and I want the people residing here to pay a part of their own expenses.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Speaker, has my time expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. FORT. I submit that the gentleman representing the District occupied more of my time than I did.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I do not object to the gentleman occupying all night, but he misstates this point entirely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the gentleman representing the District?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir; I say in advance that I do not yield to anybody, and I hope I shall not be interrupted with any request of that kind.

Mr. Speaker, as I cannot vote on this question—as I am a tax-payer in this District and hence prohibited by the rules of the House from voting on this question—I want to call attention to some views upon this matter of taxation. All the people of the United States are interested in having the city of Washington made that which it ought to be—such a capital as is worthy of a great nation. This cannot be done simply by appropriations by Congress. If men of means, of culture, of taste, will not come here and make this city their home for at least a portion of the year, you will not have a beautiful city.

Now, what is the effect of imposing taxes larger than those of any other city in the Union upon the prosperity and growth of this city? Will men build or buy residences here? Will they, unless forced to come here by their profession or their business, make a home in this city and take any stake in its affairs?

Now, I declare in all solemnity that if I had known my property here would be subjected to a tax of 3 per cent. I should not have thought it best to make any investment here, although in the future I may be called here by my professional business. And the same consideration would operate upon other men.

A MEMBER. One and a half per cent., not 3 per cent., is the rate proposed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Three per cent. is the rate now being levied; I do not know what you are going to do upon this bill.

Taxes in Massachusetts are $1.80 on the $100, where the United States have no interest. Why should the people here, where there is no business to support taxation except the business of the Government, be called on to pay so large a rate of taxation?

This city, owing to these improvements which have run up this debt, has now become in winter one of the pleasantest cities in the whole Union. The streets are passable at all times; its climate is delightful; and happily in point of health it is by reason of the work which has been done in the way of drainage, &c., improving year by year. Men are coming here now to build residences and making it a winter home. Why should we undertake, by putting on a large taxation, to drive them away? For such must be the inevitable effect.

One word further, and I will trouble the House no more on this question. The United States, it is said, do not pay taxes anywhere else on their custom-houses, their post-offices, and other public buildings. Why do they not? Because the States have no power of taxation as against the United States, and because custom-houses and other public buildings are an advantage to the locality where they are situated, so that the locality should bear as it does the burdens of taxation. But here there is an entirely different condition of things. All that is here is for the benefit of the whole people of the United States, and I do not believe there are any among the people of the country who will grudge the amount necessary to improve properly the public buildings and grounds here or to beautify this city.

I think the United States should bear a fair proportion of the taxation here, and while this is so, the taxes ought to be lower here than anywhere else, because fortunately the District of Columbia has not what my State has—a tax on account of a very large war debt, although we furnished besides a reasonable proportion of soldiers to the war.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MERRIAM. I am glad that we have been informed why the tax here should be small—that rich men may come here and be happy!

Mr. NIBLACK. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] so as to make the tax $2.25 on $100. I am not disposed to unite in this general crusade against the late District government. That branch of the case has already been discussed quite exhaustively, and it is one with which I am not so familiar as are many other gentlemen.

Toward the gentlemen who had charge of the late District government I never entertained personally any ill-will, and I do not desire to say anything now that might do injustice to any one connected with that government. But I have no hesitation in saying I came to the conclusion before that District government had been in existence a year that it must lead, as afterward proved, to signal and most disastrous failure. I presume the gentlemen in charge of the government carried out the inspirations infused into or plans laid down for them by some high power in the Government, or other controlling influence scarcely less potent. Whether that inspiration came from Congress or the Executive, or arose from some supposed party necessity, I do not undertake to say, because I am not sufficiently informed on the subject to speak advisedly. But, sir, it was evident to me before the first year expired, as I have said, that there must be a financial crash in this District and that the General Government would be called upon sooner or later to make up the large deficiency which would result from the non-collection of taxes assessed in different forms upon the people and property here.

In this connection I will remark that there is but one alternative left, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] has well said. The Government must contribute whatever is fair and right as its proportion of the expenses of the District and toward the payment of the debt now resting upon the property of the District, and then we must tax the people all they can reasonably bear, that the property of the District may contribute its just share.

What I sought the floor more particularly, however, to say, and I know the Chair will not exactly concur with me in all I may say on this presentation of the subject but it is nevertheless my duty to say it, is that the failure of this District government is due in a very great measure to that extraordinary infliction which we placed upon the people of this District some years ago by making the District the experimental garden for indiscriminate, vagabond, uneducated, carpet-bag, and non-taxpaying suffrage, white and black. No government can exist based upon any such suffrage as existed at the time this late government was established. No stable government can exist in certain Southern States because that same element of suffrage predominates there. It failed as all similar governments must fail. It failed as the government of Louisiana has failed. It failed as the governments of other Southern States have failed in a greater or less degree. It will always fail everywhere unless restrained by the Government or some other equally potent and extraneous influence. If not so restrained, total wreck must follow. Despair as a specter must enter every household.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio, obtained the floor.

Mr. COTTON. I must call the previous question after the gentleman from Ohio has finished his remarks.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. There are some gentlemen who have made three or four speeches, and there are other gentlemen who desire to be heard but have not yet had an opportunity to get the floor. Is it in order for a member to speak who has already occupied the floor, while gentlemen are seeking the floor who have not had a chance?

The SPEAKER, pro tempore. Technically, of course, the debate proceeds on each amendment with one speech for and one speech against it. The Chair will endeavor in all cases to recognize gentlemen who have not spoken.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. Speaker, there was a good deal in the speech of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] in which I concur. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] who is in the chair, as well as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE], holds that Congress under the Constitution of the United States has exclusive jurisdiction over this District and cannot delegate that jurisdiction upon anybody else. It makes little difference how this debt was incurred, whether according to law or not. There is a large debt hanging over the people of this District. What for? For extensive and valuable improvements. By the expenditure of this money the people have made, whether lawfully or not, this city of Washington one of the most beautiful on the continent; and the question we have to consider is how much taxes we shall impose on the people here. We have authority to say whatever we please, as I understand it. Now I have submitted a table made up from sworn statements of officers in Ohio that the principal towns and cities of that State are now paying taxes of more than $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

I believe the cities of the United States are paying a tax of more than $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. And why should not the people of the city of Washington pay as much tax as the people of the cities in other portions of the country?

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] says they should not do this; and why? He wants people of wealth, of culture, of refinement to come here to live, and he wants to tax all the balance of the people of the United States to relieve these people when they come here to live in order to build up here a capital. That is the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and with that argument I take issue.

What, sir, are the poor people, the laboring people, the manufacturing people of this country to be taxed for the benefit of the rich people and the people of culture? That is the philosophy of the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts. We are to tax everybody else for the benefit of culture and wealthy people. The man who is worth a million or two millions of dollars must be induced by low taxation to come to the city of Washington, and we must make the taxes of the city of Washington lower by imposing higher tax on everybody else in the United States.

Is it desirable that we should build up a great capital like Paris or Vienna, to be supported by the labor and toil of the people of every other part of the country? If you do, the result will be you will have the most useless population in this splendid capital of yours that there is in the world. Our true policy is to have our people producers of wealth, and not to have any portion of the population living upon the wealth that is taken from the pockets and the brains and the labor of other people. I have no desire to have a great, splendid, idle, profligate capital here at the city of Washington. I have more interest in the people who are working in the manufacturing shops of the East and the commercial towns of the West than I have in this elegantly dressed, gay, fashionable population that swarms in the streets of this city. I trust we will do nothing to add to this idle population of the city of Washington. I believe they are now the best dressed, the best fed, and best housed people on this continent in proportion to their numbers.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, a joint committee of the two branches of Congress was chosen at the last session to frame a form of government for the District of Columbia. Their duty also was to determine the proportion, as well as they could, which the United States ought to pay of the expenses of the District government. That committee devoted many weeks to a most laborious and careful investigation, and, consisting, one-half of it, of each of the political parties, arrived at a resolution in which they were entirely unanimous. The plan of that form of government which they devised, and which now is hanging in the Senate and may not be reached in the House at the present session—though I hope it may—was this: That as Congress had conferred on it by the Constitution exclusive power of legislation over the District of Columbia in the same clause which gave it jurisdiction over forts, arsenals, and the like, it was right, as we had laid out a capital here on a scale of magnificence which no sane people of the means and numbers of the people of Washington city ever would have adopted themselves—as we had laid out this capital for national purposes, with these enormous streets, with these numerous squares, and these public buildings, it was the duty of Congress to legislate for and govern this District and provide for it as they would for West Point or any other national property that was under their control. At the same time that, as there was a population assembled here brought here solely by the fact that this was the national capital, for there is neither trade nor manufactures nor any means of getting a living in this town except what the National Government brings with it, it was fair that its people should pay for the benefits of government about the same sum that on an average well-governed cities through the country paid. And after an examination made with the greatest care, and getting the rate that was paid in the various cities and towns through the country and comparing the rates of valuation in those cities, the committee came to the unanimous conclusion to recommend to Congress that the rate of 2 per cent. should be for a beginning and as an experiment a fair rate for this District. We consider that they need a great deal of money at present, and therefore should pay as much as they can fairly bear. And we considered also that they had been severely taxed, even oppressively taxed, during the past year.

We examined the question as to different rates of taxation for different parts of the District, and we came to the conclusion that there should not be such a difference. We could see that Georgetown or the county does not get the same benefit as the city from the street-lamps, pavements, &c. On the other hand, that is always discounted on the value of property, and if you assess it upon an even and fair valuation, then each man pays his share. We therefore advised the House to adopt the rate of 2 per cent. If we find it oppressive, if we find it too heavy, it can be modified. If we find the people could bear more and that that is not enough to furnish their share of the expenses, we can raise it.

But the amount of time of the investigation of your committee I am sure was as great as it is possible for the House to exercise in this one evening.

Mr. RANDALL. I would ask the gentleman whether the committee reached a result as to the true proportion of taxes to be paid by the people of the District and by the Government?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The committee thought the United States should appropriate for this District whatever sum they thought desirable to be expended upon the capital of the nation. But it was impossible to make a proportion, because a large share of the expenses we have to pay is for objects which the citizens alone would not have an interest in. The taxation of the citizens should be for the schools, for water, lights, sidewalks, police, and courts; they should pay what would be a fair contribution for good government, compared to what is paid by other citizens of the country, and then Congress should appropriate such sums in addition as they see fit, without making any proportion.

Mr. RANDALL. You reached no relative percentage?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. We came to the conclusion that it was impossible to reach a relative percentage, because Congress had power to require these greater things to be done which the citizens of the District could not do.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I recognize the fact that if we get along very far with this bill to-night we must go along more rapidly than we have done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state in reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] and the gentleman who has charge of the bill [Mr. COTTON] that the Chair does not understand that this House is considering this bill by sections at this time. The Chair understands that the bill has been amended in some of the later sections. The gentleman in charge of the bill can call the previous question when he obtains the floor for that purpose on any particular amendment, or on all the pending amendments, or on the whole bill.

Mr. COTTON. Permit me to correct the Chair. The bill on the Clerk's desk is a substitute reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the amendments were put on in the committee and not in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair derives his information upon that point from the Clerk.

Mr. COTTON. The first section only has been amended in the House. I shall certainly move the previous question after ten minutes more for debate.

Mr. RANDALL. The previous question on what?

Mr. COTTON. On the bill and amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope not.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. It seems to me that it is very important to understand the ruling of the Chair. According to that ruling, and I believe he is right, the gentleman in charge of this bill can call the previous question on the whole bill, or on all the amendments, or on any one amendment pending to the bill. If gentlemen understand that by and by the previous question is to be called on the bill, they will see the importance, if they have any amendments to offer to other portions of the bill, of putting them in pretty soon.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I understand the question now under consideration to be the rate or percentage of taxation that is to be put on the property of this District. I do not stand here to claim that the people of this District ought to be taxed any higher than the people of other cities and towns. But I do say that in my opinion the people of this District ought not to complain if they are called upon to pay as high a tax as the people of other towns and cities, not so favored as this city is, are obliged to pay for their own support.

The gentleman from Ohio on my right [Mr. SMITH] said, as I understood him, that in the State of Ohio in all their towns and incorporated cities they paid a tax of about $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the entire cash value of their property.

Mr. FRYE. Allow me one question.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I cannot yield, for I have only five minutes. The people of Iowa pay from 3 to 5 per cent. on their assessments. The assessment is not the full value of the property, but a little over one-half of the value. I hold in my hand a report of the auditor of the State of Iowa, and I find by that report that the rate of taxation there is from 3 to 6 per cent. In the county of Polk, represented by my colleague on my left, [Mr. KASSON,] the tax last year was 55 mills; and of that 2 per cent. was for schools. In the county of Marshall, represented by my colleague, [Mr. WILSON,] the tax last year was 47 mills—nearly 5 per cent. Now, it seems to me it does not lie in the mouths of the people of this District to ask that the people of Ohio and Iowa should pay the surplus of taxes that they should pay, until they themselves pay the same that the people of those States pay.

Mr. KELLOGG. Have not the people of this District paid 5 per cent. for the last two or three years?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I do not know as to that. I am talking about what this bill proposes. I understand the commissioners of the District are of the opinion that the rate of taxation should be 2 per cent. I think that is a reasonable rate of taxation and I am satisfied with it, and I think the House should fix the rate at 2 per cent.

Let me say one word further. My colleague [Mr. COTTON] proposes to call the previous question on this bill. Let me make this suggestion: we propose in this bill to tax personal property; but the bill is so imperfect that under it you cannot collect one-tenth of the personal tax which it proposes to levy. The bill must be amended; and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] has an amendment upon this subject. I only ask my friend from Iowa [Mr. COTTON] not to call the previous question on the entire bill. I will say that in my opinion 2 per cent. is a fair and reasonable tax for the people of this District.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Before proceeding to discuss the amendment I am about to offer, I will merely say that but for the fact that I recognize the very great importance of the passage of this bill, I should be very glad to reply to some remarks of a personal nature made by the Delegate representing this District [Mr. CHIPMAN] as regards myself. But I forbear to enter upon that line of discussion. I wish to say simply a word with reference to the tax that ought to be imposed on this District under existing circumstances. There is one feature of the case which I have not yet heard alluded to in this discussion.

At the last session of Congress a tax of 3 per cent. was imposed upon the people of this District. I had something to do with the framing of the bill which imposed that tax. It seemed to be absolutely necessary to impose it; for even with that taxation of 3 per cent. Congress was required to appropriate $1,300,000 to enable the District to get along in the difficulties with which it was surrounded. But now, Mr. Speaker, in fixing the tax to be imposed upon property in this District, it should be borne in mind that the improvements which have been made here have been enormously expensive; that special assessments of the most grievous character have already been imposed upon the people. I agree with my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] in the opinion that when we shall have gotten to the bottom of this debt (if we ever shall get there) it will be found to be somewhere between twenty-two and twenty-five million dollars. No effort to whitewash this thing or cover it up (come from whatever source that effort may) will avail. Figures and facts hereafter will prove such to be the aggregate of the debt.

Now, in the creation of this debt, enormous special assessments have been levied upon the people in this District. Those assessments they are being compelled to pay; and this in my judgment is a matter of exceeding importance to be taken into consideration in fixing the rate of tax that we shall now levy. I believe that under the circumstances an imposition of 2 per cent. is as far as we ought to go.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Have not the improvements for which these assessments are made increased the value of the property?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. That may be; but the people have to get the money some way or other to pay the tax, and that is the difficulty. When they have to pay these special assessments in addition to a tax of 2 per cent., it seems to me it is all they are now able to bear.

But, Mr. Speaker, it was with reference to another matter that I sought the floor. I rose to offer an amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk and in connection with it I ask to have a letter read. I offer my amendment as an additional section.

Mr. COTTON. Then it had better be reserved to come in at the end of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be regarded as pending, to be taken up at the appropriate time.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I desire to have it read now so that the attention of the House may be directed to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section the following:
SEC. — That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall cause to be made a register of all bonds, sewer certificates, and other obligations of every kind of the city of Washington, the city of Georgetown, or the District of Columbia whatsoever, heretofore paid or redeemed by said commissioners or which may hereafter be paid or redeemed; and at a time appointed by them shall in the presence of the First and Second Comptrollers and the Second Auditor of the Treasury, whose duty it shall be to attend, destroy said certificates or other obligations by burning the same until they are entirely consumed. And the commissioners of the sinking fund of said District in like manner shall cause a register to be made of all such bonds, certificates, or obligations heretofore paid or redeemed by them, or which may hereafter be paid or redeemed by them; and at a time to be by them appointed shall in the presence of said Comptrollers and Auditor, whose duty it shall be to attend, destroy said bonds, certificates, obligations or evidences of indebtedness by causing the same to be burned until they are entirely destroyed. And the parties herein specified shall make and sign a certificate to said register that the said bonds, certificates, or other obligations or evidences of indebtedness specified in such register were in their presence destroyed as required by the provisions in this section.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I ask the Clerk to read the letter I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1875.

SIR: The commissioners of the District have redeemed $470,000 of sewer certificates and $1,102,000 of the thirty-year Washington funding loan bonds issued under the act of the Legislative Assembly of the District approved June 20, 1872, entitled "An act to fund unsettled liabilities of the city of Washington and providing for the issuing of bonds, and levying and collecting taxes to pay the same;" of the latter $450,000 are in the hands of the commissioners, and $652,000 are in the hands of the commissioners of the sinking fund. The commissioners have also redeemed $12,000 of the District permanent improvement bonds issued under the act of June 23, 1873, entitled "An act in addition to an act making appropriations for improvements and repairs in the District of Columbia, and providing for the payment thereof, approved July 10, 1871." They desire authority from Congress to cancel all the above-named securities in their hands, and will be obliged if you will give the matter your personal attention and secure the necessary legislation in the premises.

Very respectfully,

W. DENNISON,
J. H. KETCHAM,
S. L. PHELPS,

Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. J. M. WILSON,
House of Representatives United States.

Mr. THOMPSON obtained the floor.

Mr. COTTON. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THOMPSON] proceeds, I wish to state that I propose to move the previous question as soon as I get the opportunity upon the amendments to the first section, as that is the most important section, fixing the rate of taxation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. COTTON,] in order that he may not be misled, that though he is at liberty to move the previous question on amendments pending to the first section, yet after the previous question has exhausted itself upon those amendments, other amendments may be moved; so that nothing would be gained by that course, except to have the particular amendments pending disposed of.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I desire to state that I have modified somewhat the phraseology of the amendment I heretofore sent up.

Mr. THOMPSON. I offer the following amendment as a new section:

SEC. — That so much of the act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1874, as repealed the thirty-fourth section of the act entitled "An act to provide a government for the District of Columbia," approved February 21, 1871, be, and the same is hereby, repealed. And the commissioners, or their successors in office, for the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to cause an election to be held for a Delegate from said District to the House of Representatives, as heretofore provided by said section of said act by the acts of the Legislative Assembly of said District. And the registration of voters of the year 1872 shall stand as the registration of voters for the said election, subject to such changes and corrections as may be made by the late board of registration of said District, who are hereby required to act for the purpose of making such changes and corrections for six days prior to the said election between the hours of twelve m. and eight p. m. of each day; the said board to conform to such regulations as were in force immediately prior to the 20th of June, 1874: Provided, That the election of said Delegate to the Forty-fourth Congress shall be held on the 1st day of June next, and thereafter at such time as members of Congress from the States are now or may hereafter be required to be elected.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is not germane to the bill. It provides for an election of a Delegate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. That certainly is not germane.

Mr. GARFIELD. This is a tax bill; and that is an amendment providing for an election.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. COTTON. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the bill. It embraces in it a proposition recommended by the commissioners of the District. We intended to report it in a separate bill, but as it relates to penalties I move it now as an amendment to this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all property, real and personal, held in any manner for public-school purposes by the trustees of public schools, or by any one of the late boards of trustees of public schools, shall be, and is hereby, vested in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That all proper regulations for the construction of buildings and maintenance of fire limits in said District heretofore adopted by the late city corporations, or either of them, or by the late board of public works or by the successors to their functions, the commissioners of said District, or which may hereafter be adopted by said commissioners or their successors in the executive department of said District, shall be enforced by the courts, or in cases where summary proceedings are necessary, by the Metropolitan police of said District on order of the police court of said District, made on information filed in said court in the name of said District by the attorney of said District; and all penalties under said building regulations shall be recovered in said police court as fines are for violation of municipal laws and ordinances to the use of said District.

SEC. 3. That for the better performance of the duties imposed by law upon the chief of the Metropolitan police in regard to the execution and return of process of the police court, and the collection and payment of the fines, penalties, forfeitures, and costs imposed or taxed by said court on judgment in favor of the District of Columbia, the board of police is hereby authorized and directed to detail a member of the Metropolitan police for special attention to said duties; said member of the police shall be detailed and his detail shall be revoked on the written request of the executive department of the District. Before entering upon his duties he shall give bond to the District of Columbia for their faithful performance in the sum of $1,000, with sureties to be approved by the District commissioners. He shall daily pay over to the treasurer of said District, on special deposit, all moneys collected or received by him during the preceding day on the judgment of said court in favor of said District, with a detailed statement, taking from said treasurer duplicate receipts therefor, one of which he shall file forthwith in the office of the District attorney. The salaries, compensation, and incidental expenses of the police court shall be paid out of said special deposit, and at the end of each month the surplus remaining shall be passed into the District treasury to the credit of the judicial fund: Provided, That no expenses of the police court other than those expressly authorized by law shall be paid without a previous certificate from the judge of said court that they are necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane to this bill. This is a tax bill; and that amendment relates to penalties.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I wish to move some amendments from the Committee for the District of Columbia, which we deem to be of importance.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the Speaker to decide that amendments are in order to the entire bill and must be received before the previous question can be moved. How many amendments will that allow to be pending at once to this bill? If they are to be considered in their order I will be able to understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair considers the amendments as pending to different parts of the bill.

Mr. COTTON. Let all the amendments be considered as pending without being read, and then let the previous question be seconded.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I agree to that.

The amendments offered by Mr. CHIPMAN and pending to the several sections are as follows:

Amendments to section 2:

That the salary of the surveyor for the District of Columbia shall hereafter be $1,440 per annum, and the present incumbent shall be paid for his services since the 20th of June, 1874, at that rate.

That hereafter the salary of the assistant attorney for the District of Columbia shall be $2,000 per annum.

That the said commissioners or their successors in office shall allow and pay to the treasurer of the sinking-fund commissioners the sum of $1,500 per annum, and to each member of said commission the sum of $1,000 per annum: Provided, That where a member of said commission is the treasurer thereof he shall receive but $1,500 per annum.

Amendments to section 3:

Provided, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay from any moneys collected under this act the amount by them found to be due to the employees of the late board of public works and the District of Columbia; and that the board of audit for said District and said commissioners be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to withhold the moneys or certificates of indebtedness due to any contractor from said District Government or the board of public works, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to secure the payment in full of any employees to whom said contractors may be indebted.

That the attorney for the District of Columbia be, and he is hereby, directed to prepare and report to the next Congress a compilation of the statute law applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia, arranged under appropriate titles and chapters, (excluding ordinances of the corporations of Washington, Georgetown, and the levy court and the acts of Congress,) and the commissioners for the District are authorized to pay the sum of $2,000 to defray the expenses of said compilation.

That the fourth section of the act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved by striking out "March" and inserting "June."

Amendment to section 11:

Strike out "$500" and insert "$750" in line 4.

Amendment to section 14:

That the commissioners for the District of Columbia, or their successors in office, shall without delay cause the assessment to be completed for all special improvements in the District of Columbia done by the late board of public works or by said commissioners; and the said commissioners shall proceed to levy the tax therefor as provided by law.

Amendment to section 14:

That the board of audit for the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to receive and audit the claim of William Bowen for abating certain nuisances under a contract with the board of health of said District for filling lots Nos. 37, 38, 39, 42, and 43, in square No. 545, and lots 1, 6, and 7, in square No. 849, and parts of lots Nos. 1 and 42 in square north of square No. 833, and lots 11 and 12 in square No. 996, all in the city of Washington: Provided, That said board of health shall be, and they are hereby, prohibited from incurring any liability not previously authorized by act of Congress.

Mr. MERRIAM. I move in section 5, line 22, after the word "within," to insert "five years" instead of "one year;" so it will read:

Immediately after the close of the sale, upon payment of the purchase-money, he shall issue to the purchaser a certificate of sale; and if the property shall not be redeemed by the owner thereof within five years from the day of sale, by payment of the amount for which it was sold at such sale, and 15 per cent. per annum thereon, a deed thereof shall be given by the commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, to the purchaser at the tax sale, or the assignee of such certificate, which deed shall be admitted and held to be a good and perfect title in fee simple to any property bought at any sale herein authorized.

Mr. Speaker, the transformation from chivalry to shovelry in this District was so rapid as to turn many a man in moderate circumstances out of his home. The opening of streets far beyond the borders of the city where speculators had bought wild lands caused assessments to be made upon property owned by men of small means they could not bear. These men who had been a life-time accumulating money enough to buy a home have been turned out after they had, as they thought, secured a home for themselves and family for life. If they are allowed on the present tax bill only one year for redemption, there is no hope for them.

There is not a city in the world where after sales of property for taxes only twelve months are allowed to redeem the property in.

Sickness, insanity, and a thousand misfortunes may prevent worthy and willing men from meeting tax assignments promptly. Do not let us be cruel and unjust. A capitalist with $100,000 could come here and buy property at these tax sales on which, under any circumstances, he would get 15 per cent. per annum; and if one year only is allowed for redemption, in ninety cases out of a hundred he would be found owner of the property. Now, it must be apparent to every gentleman here that that would be a great injustice to a man of ordinary means. I therefore offer this amendment, hoping it will be adopted in the interest of the poor man, that he may have a fair opportunity to save his life's work.

Mr. COTTON. I now move the previous question on the bill and pending amendments. I am still willing, however, in order to perfect the bill, to admit any brief amendment to any portion of the bill and have it pending.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I have been waiting to understand the precise course which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COTTON] was wishing to pursue, as I have an amendment authorized by the committee itself which I desire to offer as an additional section.

I wish to do so at the proper time and to make some remarks on it when I do offer it.

Mr. COTTON. There will be no objection to my colleague making those remarks now.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he merely call the previous question on the first section and amendments.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I send to the desk the amendment which I desire to offer as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as an additional section the following:

Be it further enacted, That the board of audit be required on or before the 31st day of March, 1875, to finish the examination and settlement of accounts of the treasurer and auditor of the board of public works in the manner heretofore required by law, and as far as practicable they shall on or before said day conclude all other duties heretofore required of them, and thereafter all the duties and powers previously devolved on said board except examination and settlement of the accounts of the treasurer and auditor of the board of public works shall be imposed upon the commissioners and accounting officers of the District. Within ten days after said 31st day of March said board of audit shall submit a full and final report to the President, and on the 1st day of December, 1875, said commissioners shall report to the President all other proceedings thereunder, and both of said reports shall by the President be transmitted to Congress at its next session.

Mr. COTTON. I am requested to limit the call for the previous question to the amendments to the first section, these being of so much importance.

Mr. RANDALL. The first section and the amendments pending thereto.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If the previous question is only to operate on the first section and the amendments pending to the first section, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the question in that way.

The question being put, the previous question was seconded on the first section and the pending amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. Now let us have the section read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the section and the amendments in their order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, there shall be levied, upon all real and personal property in said District, excepting only that hereinafter stated, a tax of $1.50 on each $100.

Mr. RANDALL. Now let the Clerk read the words which have been added to the section by the amendment already adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

But the assessment and taxes levied shall not be held to apply to any property, real or personal, held or owned by the United States.

Mr. COTTON. That has been agreed to. Now read the pending amendments.

The SPEAKER. The first amendment pending is that of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WILLARD,] which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out after the word "all," in line 5, down to and including the word "dollars," in line 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Personal property in said District, excepting only that hereinafter stated and upon all real estate within the cities of Washington and Georgetown, a tax of $2 on each $100 of valuation; and upon all other real property in said District a tax of $1.50 on each $100 of valuation.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know if gentlemen who own property in the District are entitled to vote on this amendment.

Several MEMBERS called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio raises the objection that members who hold property in the District are not entitled to vote on this amendment. The objection will be ruled upon when such members so vote.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, and upon a division there were—ayes 41, noes 31; no quorum voting.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for tellers on that amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that those who are in favor of two dollars tax vote "ay," and those in favor of a dollar and a half tax vote "no."

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 47, noes 61; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I call for the yeas and nays. We may as well take the yeas and nays, and that will disclose whether there is a quorum present or not.

Mr. GARFIELD. In order to save the trouble that may come from a tangle upon this bill, I suggest that we consider the previous question as pending on the bill and amendments, and then adjourn, and it will come up to-morrow as unfinished business.

Mr. RANDALL. O, no.

Mr. GARFIELD. How will the gentleman go on with the bill?

Mr. RANDALL. By calling the previous question on the first section, which is the vital one of the bill, and the amendments pending to that section.

Mr. GARFIELD. What does the gentleman propose to do with this House at this time of night on this first section to which so many amendments are pending?

Mr. RANDALL. We might take a recess until half past ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that no business can now be done except a call of the House or an adjournment, and that the call for the yeas and nays on the amendment is not now in order.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. COTTON. I move that the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman that during the six days when the rules can be suspended he can get a two-thirds vote to fix some other time for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I desire to inquire if all the amendments which have been sent to the Clerk's desk will be considered as pending and will be printed in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They will be printed in the RECORD and will be considered as pending, those that have been read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. COTTON. I will make a proposition to take a recess till to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Many MEMBERS. O, no.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and it was not agreed to—upon a division ayes 49, noes 53.

Mr. COTTON. I now ask the House to consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House having found itself without a quorum, no motion is in order except a motion to adjourn and a motion for a call of the House.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The motion to adjourn having been voted down, I move a call of the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is it not the duty of the Chair to order a call of the House when it is shown there is no quorum present?

Mr. RANDALL. O, no.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. One motion to adjourn has been lost, and no other motion to adjourn can be made until some business has intervened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The submitting the motion for a call of the House is business.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order by unanimous consent to take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock? That would avoid a waste of time by having a call of the House now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would be in order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object, and the motive of my objection is very plain. It would be as impossible to have a quorum here to-morrow morning at ten o'clock as it is to have a quorum here now.

Mr. THOMPSON. I renew my motion to adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and upon division there were—ayes 62, noes 50.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. COTTON. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn. It looks to me as if there was a quorum here, if gentlemen would all vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—ayes 64, nays 57, not voting 166; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Atkins, Barber, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Burchard, Burleigh, Cain, Caldwell, Caulfield, Corwin, Crittenden, Danford, Durham, Finck, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hathorn, Havens, Gerry W. HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 4149) for the sale of timber lands in the States of California and Oregon and in the Territories of the United States—to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 4740) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules of the two Houses be suspended for the residue of the present session.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REPORT ON MINING STATISTICS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the resolution of the House of Representatives for the printing of the report of R. W. Raymond on mining statistics, with accompanying engravings, disagreed to by the House.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That the Senate insist on its amendment disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, presented a petition of citizens of Antrim County, Michigan, praying the establishment of a mail-route from Central Lake post-office to Marcelona, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Croton, Michigan, praying Congress to grant to each Union soldier $200 in legal-tender notes instead of one hundred and sixty acres of land; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SPENCER. I present a memorial of the republican members of the General Assembly of Alabama, first showing the changes made by the Alabama Legislature in the penal code of the State, by which a system of involuntary servitude and peonage for African citizens is sought to be inaugurated; second, the political legislation of the State, by means of which republican voters to the amount of ninety-three thousand are practically disfranchised of representation, and how democrats propose to take away republican representation, by means of which they would alter our republican constitution and substitute an organic act favorable to a practical nullification of the constitutional amendments; and, third, asking Congress to empower the President to suspend the writ of habeas corpus in certain contingencies in order to preserve the public peace in the Southern States. I ask that this memorial be printed and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BAYARD. This is a very long paper. I do not know about printing a matter of this kind.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be objection, the question of printing the memorial will go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely ask is it proper to print a paper of this kind?

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the paper will be printed. It is a memorial signed by the republican members of the Legislature, and showing what our democratic friends are doing. It is not so lengthy.

Mr. BAYARD. If it is not very long, I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the order to print will be made.

Mr. BAYARD subsequently said: As a matter of morning business just now, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPENCER] presented a memorial and asked that it be printed, which is not customary. I asked if it was a long paper. He said, no, quite a short one; and therefore I withdrew any objection, and instead of its being referred to the Committee on Printing, as it should have been, I had no objection to its being printed as the Senator requested. Upon examination of the paper now I find that it is a very formidable document in size, and therefore suggest that it should be sent to the Committee on Printing. I ask that the leave given to print, without consideration, may be reconsidered, and that the motion to print be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SPENCER. I wish to state to the Senator from Delaware that I do not care about the accompanying documents being printed with the memorial. If the memorial be printed, which is not long, the accompanying documents I do not care about being printed.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator state the number of pages?

Mr. SPENCER. I cannot state the number of pages, perhaps ten or twelve pages of writing.

Mr. BAYARD. It is a very small matter; let it go to the Committee on Printing, and let that committee report upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware moves—

Mr. SPENCER. I hope that will not be done. It has already been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I want the subject to be brought before that committee as soon as possible.

Mr. BAYARD. Then let the memorial alone be printed without the accompanying papers.

Mr. SPENCER. All I ask is that the memorial be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the memorial alone will be printed, without the accompanying documents.

Mr. SCOTT. I present a memorial of bankers, merchants, and others of the city of Philadelphia, interested in the trade with China and Japan, and representing that the interests of all engaged in this trade would suffer irreparable injury by the discontinuance of the semi-monthly mail service between San Francisco and China and Japan, and remonstrating against any legislation which would result in the discontinuance of that service. As that subject is now before the Senate, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCHURZ presented a resolution of the Legislature of Missouri, in favor of granting a pension to all soldiers of the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill now pending before Congress providing for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Muskingum County, Ohio, remonstrating against the restoration of the duties on tea and coffee and praying the repeal of the act of 1872 reducing the duties on certain imports 10 per cent; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON presented a memorial of bankers, merchants, and others of the city of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the withdrawal of the semi-monthly mail between San Francisco and China and Japan; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BOGY presented a memorial of citizens of Ozark Iron-Works, county of Phelps, Missouri, remonstrating against the restoration of the duties on tea and coffee and praying the repeal of the act of 1872 reducing the duties on certain imports 10 per cent; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Missouri, asking an appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River in accordance with the plan submitted by J. B. Eads; which was referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board.

Mr. GORDON presented two memorials of citizens of Georgia, remonstrating against the restoration of the duties on tea and coffee and praying the repeal of the act of 1872 reducing the duties on certain imports 10 per cent; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALCORN presented a memorial of John W. Robinson, of Hinds County, Mississippi, asking compensation for certain goods, wares, and merchandise taken and destroyed by the United States forces at Jackson, Mississippi, during the war of the rebellion; or that his claim be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3272) for the relief of John T. Burchell, of Knoxville, Tennessee, for services rendered in a small-pox hospital, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of officers of the Masonic Lodge of Georgetown, South Carolina, praying compensation for the destruction of the Masonic hall in that town by United States troops in 1865, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Patrick Sullivan, late lieutenant Nineteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, praying compensation for services rendered in recruiting men for the Army in 1862, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1078) for the relief of S. K. Thompson, late second lieutenant in the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCREERY. The Committee on Foreign Relations have had under consideration the memorial of Christine H. Stevens and Thomas S. Rhett, administrators of the estate of Walter H. Stevens, deceased, asking payment for six thousand tons of coal taken possession of by Mexican troops at Vera Cruz, Mexico, in July, 1867, and have directed me to report that, taking for granted every statement made in this report as true, the committee is unanimously of the opinion that it makes no obligation on the part of the Federal Government. Hence they have directed me to make an adverse report and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection and the committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1325) authorizing the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company to straighten the line of their road, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3182) for the relief of the heirs of James Barnett, deceased, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3820) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments; and I would like to say to the Senate that the committee have made very few amendments, and we would like to take the bill up immediately after the conclusion of the post-office bill.

Mr. MORTON. There cannot be any consent to that.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of Baltimore, Maryland, praying relief on account of losses sustained by reason of the failure of the Baltimore Branch of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company Bank, in which they had large deposits of money, reported a bill (S. No. 1349) amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes; which was read and passed to a second reading.

TERMINATION OF TREATIES.

Mr. CAMERON. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) authorizing the President to terminate certain treaties, to report it back without amendment and ask to take it up for consideration at this time. It will occupy but a moment, I presume.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) authorizing the President to terminate certain treaties was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in all treaties now existing or which may hereafter be concluded between the United States and any foreign power, in which it is provided that any favor, exemption, privilege, or immunity which either of the contracting parties shall have already granted, or may at any time after the conclusion of such treaty grant to any other power, shall immediately become common to, and be enjoyed by, the other contracting party, and which treaty, or any article of which, by its terms may be terminated by a prescribed notice given by either of the contracting parties to the other, the President of the United States is authorized, whenever, in his opinion, the interests of the United States shall require the termination of any of said treaties, or of any article thereof, to give notice for the termination of such treaty, or of such article thereof, to the government of the other contracting party, in accordance with the provisions which may be contained in such treaty relative to the time and manner of giving such notice; and from and after the expiration of the time fixed by such notice the obligations of such treaty, or of such article, shall be held to be terminated and no longer binding on either of the parties thereto.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN subsequently said: By the approval of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate joint resolution No. 19 was passed a few moments ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. LOGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3341) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union, to report the same back without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOWE. I am afraid that will lead to debate; and I am very anxious to have a little time this morning to take up a bill reported from the Library Committee, for which I have waited a good many weeks, not patiently but impatiently.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to give notice that I shall in every morning hour ask the Senate to take this bill up. It will not in my judgment cause very much discussion, for the reason that I have facts and figures here to show that the character of the bill is such that it ought to pass.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FLANAGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1344) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Brownsville, Texas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1345) for the relief of William Hall; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WRIGHT. I introduce this bill by request. I have had no time to examine it, and of course do not commit myself to its provisions. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Patents and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TIPTON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1346) for the relief of N. S. Reneau and Adolph Bouchard; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOGY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1347) to establish certain post-roads in the State of Missouri; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADLEIGH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1348) to authorize the Commissioner of Patents to sign the certificate of extension of letters-patent No. 28470, granted to Frederick T. Grant May 29, 1860, upon a sliver-machine; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF GENERAL CUSTER'S EXPEDITION.

Mr. WASHBURN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish to the Senate the report of the late expedition to the Black Hills under the command of General Custer, United States Army.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4747) supplementary to the acts in relation to immigration;

A bill (H. R. No. 4835) in relation to the Quartermaster's Department, fixing its status, reducing its numbers, and regulating appointments and promotions therein.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution authorizing the Committee on Enrolled Bills in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. No. 1938) to extend the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of debts due from southern railroads, and for other purposes," to change the word "Linnville" to "Louisville" in the ninth line of the Senate substitute thereof, so that the line will read "the Memphis, Clarksville and Louisville."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LEWIS. Is the morning business through?

Mr. SHERMAN. What committee is entitled to this morning hour?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on the Library is entitled to the rest of the morning hour.

Mr. LEWIS. Are we through with the morning business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is through, and now by the order of the Senate the Committee on the Library is entitled to the rest of the morning hour.

Mr. LEWIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 4727 explanatory of the act passed June 20, 1874. I will just say one word. I do not intend to discuss this bill, and I do not think there will be any debate upon it—

Mr. HOWE. Allow me to say to the Senator from Virginia that the morning business does not end but the morning hour does. The whole morning is appropriated. The bill which I ask to have the Senate consider this morning is one that I have been waiting for weeks to bring forward.

Mr. LEWIS. I thought the Chair had announced that the morning business was through. If the Senator rises for morning business of course I give way to him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By an order of the Senate after the regular morning business is through the committees are called in their order and have the rest of the morning hour, and the Committee on the Library is entitled to the rest of this morning hour.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1250.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1250) making further provision for the accommodation of the Library of Congress was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides that a new fire-proof building be erected for the Library of Congress and copyright records of the United States, to be located in the center of Government reservations Nos. 15 and 16, (known as Judiciary Square,) in the city of Washington, to which shall be removed, on its completion, the books, records, and all other materials of the Library, except such portion, not less than fifty thousand volumes, as shall be designated by the Joint Committee on the Library to remain in the Capitol. The Library building thus provided for is to be designed, and its erection superintended, by a commission consisting of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library on the part of the Senate and House respectively, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Librarian of Congress.

The sum of $250,000 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to commence the erection of the Library building herein provided for.

Mr. ANTHONY. Before the bill is proceeded with I wish to state that I believe every committee that has asked for it has had some extension of time. The morning closed yesterday when we were discussing some matters from the Committee on Printing, which ought to be decided one way or the other. While I will not interfere with my friend from Wisconsin, partly because I do not want to and partly because I know I cannot, I hope that before we go back to recall the committees, the Committee on Printing may have the same privilege that other committees have had.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This report from the Committee on the Library was not made with the concurrence of all the members of the committee. Some of the members of that committee, of whom I am one, do not think that the Library ought to be removed to Judiciary Square; certainly not at this present time. A building there would involve very heavy expense, and would remove the body of the Library from the Capitol, where I for one think it ought to be. I hope, therefore, with all deference to my friend from Wisconsin, that the Senate will not consent to send this Library out of this building down to Judiciary Square. I offer to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting what I send to the Chair.

The Secretary read the matter to be inserted, as follows:

That the members of the joint standing committee of the two Houses of Congress on the Library and the Committee of the Senate on Public Buildings and Grounds are hereby authorized to cause the western front of the Capitol, or such part thereof as they may deem expedient, excepting the wings, to be extended so far as they shall deem necessary and expedient, not exceeding thirty-four feet, in order to the proper accommodation of the Library of Congress; and the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the purpose aforesaid, to be paid on vouchers approved by the architect of the Capitol extension, under such regulations as shall be established from time to time by the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think perhaps I do not do wrong in stating that if the Senate should be unwilling to move the Library to Judiciary Square and put up a large building there for it at the present time, and should be willing to do something which is absolutely necessary for the present accommodation of the Library, this amendment will not be unsatisfactory to my friend from Wisconsin, although he belongs to a majority of the Library Committee who believe that the true thing to do is to commence the erection of an edifice which will occupy the whole of Judiciary Square. I do not mean by that that the walls would; but the affair would involve taking off the courthouse or city hall or whatever is there, and erecting a fine building in that place. But others of us believe that the Library ought not to be taken away from the Capitol itself or its immediate vicinity, from the Capitol itself I think, so long as it is possible (and that will be a good many years) to keep it here by a moderate extension of the western front where the Library is now situated, which moderate extension in the opinion of a good many persons would not only provide for the Library for several years but would also be an addition to the appearance of the building itself, combining therefore two advantages to be derived from one expenditure. I hope that the amendment which I have offered will be adopted.

Mr. CLAYTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont, before he takes his seat, whether the proposed extension that he provides for in his amendment is represented by the ground-plan now in the Chamber. I see on that the segment of a circle on each side of the central pediment fronting to the westward. Is it intended to include those circular extensions?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is intended to give authority to the persons named in this amendment, acting under such architectural advice as they can get, leaving the wings as they are, complete and finished, to do whatever is necessary and best to enlarge the library-room. It may include those curves and segments, or it may not. That plan is the suggestion of an architect as one way of doing it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I should be willing for one to vote for the extension of the western central portion of the building; but I doubt very much whether, upon the information simply conveyed by that ground-plan, I should be willing to vote for the circular extensions to the right and left of the central portion, because I doubt very much what the architectural effect would be on the building.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a matter which this amendment does not comprise by inclusion, nor does it exclude it. In other words, the commission created is to extend the central portion in such way as will be best adapted to the Library and best for the building combined. This plan is not a new one which we have agreed upon as being precisely the thing to be done, but is one suggestion made by an architect as to the way of doing it; that is all.

Mr. HOWE. If the Senate care enough about this question to listen a little while to it, I think I can make them understand the alternatives presented to us. The Senator from Vermont has correctly said that you must have additional provision for the accommodation of your Library. You already have a collection, or had at the commencement of this year, of some two hundred and seventy-four thousand volumes, to say nothing about fifty or sixty thousand pamphlets, and you have over fifty thousand volumes lying on the floor, no shelf to put them upon, and your accumulations are increasing from thirty thousand to forty thousand volumes annually through the deposits of the Smithsonian Institute, the operations of the copyright, and your very limited purchases. One of three things, therefore, is inevitable: You must stop buying and sell; or you must have more space; or you must let your books, a part of the present accumulation, go to destruction.

I agree entirely with the Senator from Vermont that it would be desirable to have the Library kept here if possible; but it is the judgment I think of the whole committee that that is impossible except for a brief term. I think it is the judgment of the committee, and it is the judgment of everybody, that you cannot without spoiling this Capitol provide for the accommodation of the Library within it beyond a few years; that if your Library continues to grow, the question of accommodating it outside of the building is only a question of time.

Several plans for extending it have been presented and discussed. If you can extend the western front thirty-four feet, the outside limit suggested by the amendment moved by the Senator from Vermont, and can add those wings to it which you see on the ground-plan, you can accommodate there for ten or fifteen years the ordinary accumulations of the Library. That may be worth your while. If such is the judgment of the Senate, I acquiesce as an individual. But I want the Senate to consider two things in that connection; first, that when you have outgrown that space, the space itself will not be useless, but all you expend in shelving it will be very nearly useless. The space itself will not be useless, because you need it for legislative purposes. I want you to consider this other thing, that you are very likely to need that for legislative purposes even before the wants of your Library will actually require you to go outside of the building. But these are questions which every one can calculate just as well as the committee can or as I can.

I believe it is the opinion of almost everybody—it is very decidedly the opinion of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, it is decidedly the opinion of such architects as we have consulted, that beyond thirty-four feet you cannot go without decided injury to the architectural effect of the building itself; and I do believe that there is no Senator on this floor who would be willing to impair the effect of this building for the sake of furnishing a Library. We cannot afford that; it comes too near being a complete building, a perfect building. It is not quite perfect. A slight extension of the west front and a considerable extension of the east front, to realize the design you have in that elevation, which is now exhibited on the floor, will undoubtedly improve the effect of the building. I am one of those individuals who believe that if you would realize that idea on this east front you would have the most magnificent front, façade, or whatever it is proper to call it, to be found on earth. I do not believe there is a building that will present such a view as that would. That, however, is the east front, the design for which the Senator from Vermont sitting farthest from me [Mr. MORRILL] is more familiar with than I am. The designs for completing the approaches to the west front I think will not only warrant an extension of that front, but demand an extension of that front. The last conclusion of the architects we consulted was that the exact thing would be about twenty-four feet, but they were of opinion that it might go beyond that, even as high as thirty-four feet without injury. I have but very little confidence in my own judgment, but I should think myself, owing to the surface there, that thirty-four feet would not have an injurious effect, and would furnish accommodation for the Library for some considerable time.

So, then, you have these alternatives. I think you had better start with the conclusion that within fifteen years at the outside you must begin to prepare for your Library outside of this building. Whether you will want the additional space that you can get by this extension within fifteen years for legislative purposes is a question for you to consider. Within that time you must begin to make provision outside. When you do begin to make that provision outside, you sacrifice clearly the whole cost of the shelving for this building. I want you to consider this other thing, that whether the Library goes outside of the building next year or fifteen years hence, the whole Library never will go outside. A working library of some sixty or eighty thousand volumes will be kept in the present room for the reference of Congress during their current work. When a thorough investigation of a subject is desirable, no Senator, no lawyer sends for a few books to be brought in; he sends for the books on that subject to be carried to his room, and there he considers the question; and he can just as well order them from a building outside of this Capitol as from one inside. The disadvantage of having the great body of the Library outside, therefore, although something, is not insuperable, and is one that must be encountered some time or other.

Mr. SHERMAN. I had the honor of serving upon the Committee on the Library of the Senate two or three years ago, and it was then the unanimous opinion of the committee that it was impracticable to put all the books that gradually accumulate under the law as it now stands in this Capitol by any probable change that would be authorized by Congress. I think that was the concurrent opinion of my friend from Wisconsin, my friend from Maine, and myself, who then composed the committee; but that for a congressional library, for all the purposes needed by Congress or the Supreme Court, the present space allotted to the Congressional Library was amply sufficient, say for two or three hundred thousand volumes, and that is a greater library than is needed for the actual working of the legislative and judicial branches of the Government. It is not advisable to crowd into this building all the books that are accumulated under the copyright law. Under those circumstances, having come to this conclusion after very careful examination, after the fullest examination possible, after consulting the very capable Librarian of Congress and architects skilled in their science, it was deemed advisable and I think the committee recommended that a separate building, to be the National Library, if you please, of which the Congressional Library would be a part, but subsidiary to that, should be erected, and that in this National Library should be collected all the books that may come here under the copyright law and all the books that are gathered from foreign countries and that may be purchased by Congress for the use of the National Library. For such purpose we thought it was necessary to construct a building especially adapted to that end, a building of the form and shape and architectural proportions necessary to make a complete library, something like the British Museum or the great library in Paris. That was the conclusion of the committee, and I am of that opinion still. I think Congress might as well make up its mind that it is utterly impossible to collect in this building all the materials, documents, and books that will in time, and no very short period of time, be collected under our copyright law.

I am therefore opposed to any proposition which seeks to enlarge or change the form of this building with a view to make it a library building; but I believe the time will shortly come, probably within ten or fifteen years, when some such plan as that proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] will be adopted by Congress to enlarge this building for the uses of the courts and for the uses of Congress, and in the next five, ten, or fifteen years no doubt enlargements will be made, probably by the extension of the central building east and west, so as to give the judicial and legislative departments additional room and facilities. To that we must address ourselves, and that very soon; but that we must soon look to the foundation of the National Library I have not a particle of doubt.

If the time was opportune I would be willing to vote for the proposition reported by the Committee on the Library now. I believe that Judiciary Square, being about central in this city, being easy of access to Congress, accessible to all the Departments, accessible to the Executive and all branches of the Government, a National Library or Congressional Library, if you call it so, might be built in that square, and that a portion of it, one-third of it perhaps, might be devoted to this purpose and the other portion of it to the Patent Office and the Interior Department.

I therefore would be willing to vote for the proposition reported by the Committee on the Library if the time was opportune; but, Mr. President, now I will not vote for any proposition to authorize the building or the commencement of a public library, especially one that would involve a large expenditure of the public money. We are not in a condition to do it. I know very well that the present library is crowded. What by? Not by documents that we need; not by documents that we refer to; but by documents that are sent in there under the copyright law, which requires two copies of every book, pamphlet, magazine, or publication of any kind to be sent to the Library, and the accumulation of these publications, although right enough in itself, is not of any proper use to us now for legislative purposes or to the courts for judicial purposes. But they ought to be collected and retained as permanent archives of the National Government.

Mr. HOWE. Will my friend allow me a suggestion? We get the current literature of the day, the whole publications of this country under the operations of that copyright law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; and some of them are useful for the information of Congress, but the great mass of them are not. My friend will admit that the great mass of those publications are not necessarily indispensable for the Library of Congress.

Mr. HOWE. For statesmen they are not, but for a National Library they are.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I say they ought to be separated, and those documents intended for the use of Congress and the courts ought to be collected in this building and be ready of access, and the highest estimate any one puts on the number of those documents would not be over two hundred thousand. Indeed, I believe the present Librarian thinks sixty or seventy thousand volumes would cover all that are usually called for, and the rest ought to be placed in some less expensive building, in some locality easy of access, where they may be preserved and kept in places where the cost would not be in proportion to the value of the documents two to one.

In my judgment it is premature to introduce this subject now. We ought not to act upon it now. Let it go over to the next Congress, and Congress will direct itself no doubt to the establishment of a National Library, and separate if possible the Congressional from the National Library. At present I shall not vote for either the amendment or the original bill, and I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will let the matter go over to the next Congress when he will be here, and perhaps the time may be more favorable for the erection of a public building. In the present condition of affairs, when we are called upon to levy heavy taxes on the people, when we have hard times upon us, I will not vote to commence any public building which is likely to cost millions of dollars.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, it is undoubtedly true that the Library will crowd out Congress, as General Meigs said, or Congress will crowd out the Library unless we provide further room for it. It is indispensable that further room should at once be supplied to the Library. But when it is proposed to move the Library down to Judiciary Square, I think there are many objections which will occur to every Senator.

In the first place we do not desire to build up a library here to be merely a circulating library for this city. We desire to have it maintained as a Congressional Library.

Then, again, Judiciary Square will be wanted within a year or two for the accommodation of the General Post-Office. The present Post-Office building that we have is hardly of sufficient magnitude for the city post-office. The business of the Department at the present time is very uncomfortably crowded, and the room there is very much wanted for the Interior Department, for the Pension Bureau, the Commissioner of Education, and various other Bureaus that now have buildings for their accommodation rented outside, and which are very insecure against fire, especially so far as the papers of the Pension Bureau are concerned. This square should therefore be reserved for use at no remote day for a General Post-Office building.

If I could have the ear of the Senate long enough to argue this case in relation to a separate and independent building, I should be much in favor of such a building; and I would place it contiguous to this Capitol on the squares upon the east side of the present Capitol grounds which may be now purchased at a very low rate as compared with the price they will be sure to cost some few years hence, and we shall ere long need all of the first tier of adjacent squares, say half of them, for a public library, and the other half for a national museum of natural history or for the Supreme Court and other courts of the United States. There is no doubt but that the Government of the United States would make at least $100,000 a year by purchasing these squares at the present time. It would be greatly to our advantage to secure them now. I do not offer an amendment to that effect, although I consider that would be far the wisest course for Congress to pursue, and such a course as every Senator would pursue in the conduct of his own affairs.

Then it is obvious that we should have a working library here in the present library-rooms for Congress, and we should have a larger library so near that it would be accessible by members of Congress, and could also be connected by a gallery for passage to and from and by a pneumatic tube so that any books in it could be promptly obtained in a few minutes at any time.

But, Mr. President, the proposition of my colleague is to enlarge the western front of this building. So far as I am concerned, I would not enlarge it to the extent of holding a single volume if it were to mutilate the present plan of this building, and I utterly repudiate the idea that the center of this building can be extended on either side to any great extent without most destructive effects to the architectural appearance of the building. It is now in its facade on either side, east or west, one of the grandest buildings in the world. If you extend out the center so as to put the building in the form of a Greek cross, you make it an ecclesiastical building, more or less in the form of a cathedral, and no longer a Government building, of the present simple, classic grandeur; you would also make it by any such extension so that as you approach it obliquely upon one side or the other you would largely diminish its apparent magnitude. Its dimensions would be apparently lessened by one-half the moment you extend the center, so that you cannot see the whole front facades as you approach the building from the west or east.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but I believe the morning hour has expired.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. LOGAN. I am glad to listen to him, because his remarks are instructive; but I shall persist in calling for the regular order.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not want to take more than three minutes more time.

Mr. LOGAN. You can do that to-morrow. I should have no objection but that I was crowded out this morning because it was supposed debate would occur on my proposition. Inasmuch as no debate occurs on this, I think we had better proceed to the regular business.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely ask for about three minutes more to say what I have to say. I do not wish to occupy more time hereafter. I have only had about five minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Vermont proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely desire to say that the central building is composed of sand-stone and must be replaced at some time with marble to correspond with the wings. The expense of making some addition, and I should be glad if it could be a little less than thirty-four feet, will not be any very great addition to the cost of replacing the center with marble instead of sand-stone. Therefore it is an opportune time at the present moment, if this central portion is ever to be replaced with marble, as I presume no one doubts, that it shall be done now. Every one will recognize that in the central front of this building there is a conspicuous poverty in finish as compared with the wings. There ought to be a pediment in the center to break the sky-line, and it should be supported perhaps by a double row of columns in order to give greater dignity to the west front and main approach to the building. Senators will see on the plan proposed by Mr. Olmstead of a terrace, where the center has been brought out forty feet, that it does really injure the appearance and symmetry of the building somewhat; but it is the conviction of the old architect of the Capitol (Mr. Walter) that it might be brought out to the extent of about thirty-four feet without material injury. Other artists and experts think a less distance would be better. That this extension ought to be made now, and before the improvements contemplated for the front grounds are completed and the terraces and the stairways approaching the Capitol are constructed, is manifestly obvious to every one. Therefore the proposition presented as an amendment to bring out the center, if it is to be ever acted upon, should be acted upon at the present time. I take it we do not intend to leave these grounds plowed up and left unfinished like a common hog-yard for any further term of time. We should at least take as good care of the Capitol of the nation as we do of the post-offices in the principal cities of the country.

Now, if the Senators will notice the terrace that is to be somewhat enlarged here, they will see that there will be room, as it is proposed they shall be constructed, for fifty-six vaults that will be fifty feet in length and ten feet wide, where a large amount of documents and comparatively useless lumber, yet which it is essential to preserve, can be stowed away; for instance the duplicate copies of copyright books could be packed away there and be perfectly safe from damp and fire, and a large amount of documents that are now lumbering up the Treasury Department, filling their corridors there, can be packed away here and be entirely safe. Let me say that these vaults will be constructed at an expense of only $15,000 more than it would cost to build up this terrace solid, and will afford room for the accommodation (so it is asserted by Mr. Olmstead) of four or five hundred thousand volumes, and save an expense for this purpose of perhaps three to four hundred thousand dollars.

I trust, Mr. President, that if we cannot have a building adjacent and very near to the Capitol, where it will not interfere at all with this building, but would be a grand ornament to the exterior grounds, we shall consent that the improvement on the front may now be made, where we shall then have accommodations for the Library at least for ten or a dozen years or perhaps fifteen years. I hope the amendment will prove acceptable to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. SARGENT in the chair.) The morning hour has expired and the unfinished business of yesterday comes up.

Mr. WEST. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I gave notice yesterday evening that this morning I should move to lay aside the pending order with a view to take up the question of the reconsideration of the bill changing the boundaries of the eastern and western judicial districts of Texas. I appeal to the Senate to aid me upon this occasion; vote it up or down. I ask the disposition of the question. I have been waiting very patiently for weeks, and I desire now final action on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate hears the request of the Senator from Texas. Is there objection?

Mr. WEST. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether his proposition is going to provoke discussion at all?

Mr. FLANAGAN. I hope not. I think there is a necessity for it, to say the least.

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to say to the Senator from Texas that three different times I have tried to get up a bill and have been put aside every time. Now, until I have an opportunity to get that bill considered, I shall object to every minute's delay after the morning hour, and I call for the regular order.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I will do the Senator a kindness if I can. I appeal to him—

Mr. LOGAN. I am perfectly implacable. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I withdraw any appeal I make to the Senator. I make it to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois objects.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I ask if one objection is sufficient to put me off the floor? I gave notice yesterday, and I appeal to the Senate. If the Senate votes me down, very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the opinion of the Chair that the Senator from Texas has not yielded the floor.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I desire to call up—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In reply to the question of the Senator from Texas, it is the opinion of the Chair that a motion to lay aside all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the subject mentioned by the Senator from Texas would be in order.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I make that motion to lay aside the pending business and proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the bill (S. No. 736) to change the boundaries of the eastern and western judicial districts of the State of Texas and to fix the times and places of holding courts in the same.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Pending that I ask leave to make a report from the Judiciary Committee on the topic that we were commanded to report upon about the Pacific Mail, and I ask to make it at this moment, because I am obliged to go into the Supreme Court,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall have to read the report myself, inasmuch as it is in my writing.

The Committee on the Judiciary, which was directed by the resolution of the Senate adopted on the 13th instant to inquire and report whether the United States or any Department of the Government is legally bound to now carry into effect any contract made pursuant to the act of June 1, 1872, respecting additional mail service between San Francisco, China, and Japan, respectfully report:

That under the act of Congress of February 17, 1865, a contract was made between the Postmaster-General and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the mail service therein provided for, at the price of $500,000 per annum, which contract is still in operation and unexpired.

On the 1st day of June, 1872, in the act making appropriation for the postal service for the year ending June 30, 1873, there was enacted the following provisions:

"Sec. 3. That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the year ending June 30, 1873, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

"For steamship service between San Francisco, Japan, and China, $500,000. And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to contract with the lowest bidder, within three months after the passage of this act, after sixty days' public notice, for a term of ten years from and after the 1st day of October, 1873, for the conveyance of an additional monthly mail on the said route, at a compensation not to exceed the rate per voyage now paid under the existing contracts, and upon the same conditions and limitations as prescribed by existing acts of Congress in reference thereto, and the respective contracts made in pursuance thereof; and the contractors under the provisions of this section shall be required to carry the United States mails during the existence of their contracts, without additional charge, on all the steamers they may run upon said line, or any part of it, or any branch or extension thereof: Provided, That all steamships hereafter accepted for said service shall be of not less than four thousand tons register each, and shall be built of iron, and with their engines and machinery shall be wholly of American construction, and shall be so constructed as to be readily adapted to the armed naval service of the United States in case of war, and before acceptance the officers by whom they are inspected shall report to the Secretary of the Navy and the Postmaster-General whether this condition has been complied with: Provided, That in all cases the officers of the ships employed in the service herein provided for shall be citizens of the United States, and that persons of foreign birth, who have according to law declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, may be employed as though they were citizens within the meaning of this section, or of any act or acts specified in the act of June 28, 1864. And the Government of the United States shall have the right in case of war to take for the use of the United States any of the steamers of said line, and in such case pay a reasonable compensation therefor: Provided, The price paid shall in no case exceed the original cost of the vessel so taken, and this provision shall extend to and be applicable to the steamers of the Brazilian line hereinafter provided for."

Pursuant to this provision, advertisement was made and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company being the lowest bidder, a contract was made with it by the Postmaster-General, according to its requirements.

The advertisement prepared by the steamship company and the contract entered into will be found in the papers accompanying a letter from the Postmaster-General to the chairman of the committee, dated February 17, 1873, and herewith returned; pages 3 advertisement, 5 proposal, and 16 contract.

In order to provide for the performance of this contract on the part of the United States, the act of March 3, 1873, (volume 17, page 559,) appropriated the sum of money necessary to make the agreed payments from the date at which the steamship company was to furnish the stipulated ships and begin the carrying of the mails under the contract, namely, October 1, 1873, to the closing of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, being $365,000.

The steamship company did not furnish the ships and did not begin the service required by the act of June 1, 1872, and the contract and their appropriation lapsed.

Since that time no appropriation has been made and no action on the subject has been taken by Congress, although one or two committees of each House reported on the subject against annulling the contract.

It appears, however, that on the 8th of July, 1874, the company notified the Postmaster-General that two ships, the Takao and Peking, were ready for inspection under the contract, (referred to as of August 23, 1873, on account of a clause in the section—see letter of Postmaster-General, page 39,) and on the 8th of August, 1874, the ships having been inspected, &c. at New York, and being then there, and not at San Francisco, the Postmaster-General, under advice of the Solicitor-General and Attorney-General, accepted the vessels.

Leaving out of view all questions respecting the means by which and the influences under which the act of June 1, 1872, and the contract may have been procured, and in respect to which no evidence is before us, and upon which we express no opinion, the question is whether the United States are bound in law to go on with the execution of the contract, notwithstanding the fact that the ships were not tendered for the service until nearly a year after the time required by the act of Congress and by the contract.

We are of opinion that this question must be answered in the negative.

First. We think that in respect of executory contracts for the delivery or using movable things, or for service to be performed, the law is clear that the party claiming the benefit of the contract must tender performance not only in the manner but within the time stipulated; and failing to do this, his right to demand performance ceases altogether.

The result is that the Postmaster-General was, when the ships were tendered on the 8th of August, 1874, under no obligation to receive them or to take any steps upon the subject.

Second. We are of opinion that the Postmaster-General had no lawful power or authority to accept the vessels under the circumstances or to bind the United States in the premises.

The measure of the power of the executive officers of the Government is to be found in the acts of Congress, which declare what they are to do and how and when they are to do it. (Floyd Acceptances, 7 Wallace, 667.)

To hold that an executive officer of the Government, authorized by law to enter into a particular contract, may enter into another and different one or dispense with performance of the one lawfully made, would be not only against the rules of law, but dangerous in the extreme to public interests.

The time at our disposal does not allow us to go into extensive reasoning or citation of authorities upon the subject.

MATT. H. CARPENTER.
GEO. G. WRIGHT.
A. G. THURMAN.
J. W. STEVENSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4692) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 4669) to provide for the selection of grand and petit jurors in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4677) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1876; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 51) in relation to civil-service examinations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOWE. I am going to move to postpone the further consideration of the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion is now pending made by the Senator from Texas to postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the subject stated by the Chair before the report of the Senator from Vermont was made.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope certainly at some time, and very soon, the Senator from Texas will have an opportunity, as I think he ought to have an opportunity, to consider the motion to reconsider. It ought not to stand in the way to prevent the passage of the bill. I cannot vote to lay aside the appropriation bill without the consent of the Senator having charge of it, but at the earliest time consistent with the public business I shall cheerfully vote to give the Senator from Texas an opportunity.

Mr. FLANAGAN. The convenient season will never come.

Mr. ANTHONY. We must pass the appropriation bills first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas to lay aside the pending and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the motion stated by him.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I will withdraw the motion now, but renew it directly after the disposition of the appropriation bill.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is whether the Senate will concur in the action of the Committee of the Whole striking out that portion of the bill contained between lines 18 and 27 of section 2, which will be reported by the Secretary.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not understand that that was stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] to strike out the clause, and by unanimous consent it was agreed that that motion should prevail and the bill be reported to the Senate otherwise completed but with that question being open.

Mr. THURMAN. That was not my understanding. My understanding was that the bill was still in committee with the understanding that all questions were disposed of but one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question was raised by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. ROBERTSON] that "that would put every Senator in the attitude of having voted to strike it out," and the reply was made by the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] that that would not be the effect because it was a mere formal motion, and on that understanding the action was taken to which the Chair refers. By reference to the RECORD the Senator will see it.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not raise any question with the Chair, but my understanding was not that. I thought we were still in committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; by understanding, the bill was reported to the Senate. The question in effect is now before the Senate whether they concur with the Committee of the Whole in striking out this clause.

Mr. HOWE. Is a motion to postpone this bill for an hour in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. HOWE. I submit that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to postpone the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill for one hour, which will be till twenty minutes past one o'clock.

Mr. HOWE. I want to excuse myself for making the motion. I have been waiting here for weeks to ask the attention of the Senate to the consideration of the bill which they have considered for the space of twenty-five minutes this morning. You are making appropriations and have been making them day after day here for all sorts of purposes. You have $100,000 worth of books going to ruin every day because you will not make the appropriation which is required for their preservation. I do not own the books. I can as well see them go to ruin as any member on this floor. Hitherto, committees when they had less than an hour during the morning hour to consider their business, by the courtesy of the Senate by unanimous consent have had the hour made up to them. I have asked no courtesy and no right until this morning. When twenty-five minutes had been expended a peremptory demand was made to proceed to the order of the day. Now the Senate will proceed to the order of the day, I have no sort of doubt. I want to be discharged from the obligation of moving in this matter hereafter. I want a vote of the Senate acquitting me of all responsibility. By unanimous consent thirty-five minutes might be given to this committee, but that unanimous consent cannot be had. The Senator from Illinois gives notice that it shall not be had now or any time. He thinks he has been harshly used. His committee long since had its hour in the Senate without objection. The Library Committee asks for nothing that committee has not had, for nothing that every committee has not had standing prior to this on your list of committees. I know we ask what we stand no chance of getting. One thing we can get; we can get a vote of the Senate upon this motion to postpone for thirty-five minutes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I hope the request of the Senator from Wisconsin will be granted. Other committees have had their hour. The Library Committee certainly presents an exigency that ought to receive the consideration of the Senate, and I hope the hour will be given to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to lay aside the post-office appropriation bill for one hour.

Mr. HOWE. Thirty-five minutes, I will say.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope my honorable friend will not insist upon that. There will be an opportunity for him soon. If the Senate should think it advisable to pass this bill, on which there is now but a single question left, then the Army appropriation bill will not occupy more than half an hour, I think, and that will leave a few days in which the only question will be the order of business. That is to say, there will be no appropriation bills for the next two or three days to trouble the Senate as to the order of business. I hope that we shall not be interrupted in closing this question; and then I hope it will be the good pleasure of the Senate to allow us to pass the Army appropriation bill, and then the members of the Committee on Appropriations can attend to conference committees and give a clear course to the Senate for two or three days, or perhaps longer, for such business as they may think proper to consider. If my honorable friend thinks that will answer his purpose, I certainly will co-operate with him at any time in getting a vote on his bill.

Mr. HOWE. My friend from Maine will see that that does not answer my purpose at all, because that does not give a moment's time to the consideration of this measure. He says that after the pending bill has passed and the Army bill has passed, then the Senate will be at liberty to do something else. I suspected that before.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. And my honorable friend suspects they are not at liberty to do anything else as long as there are appropriation bills.

Mr. HOWE. I know that; but I know the other thing, too, that the Senate is at liberty to refuse to do this just at this moment, and all I ask is that the Senate will do one or the other.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My suggestion was that my honorable friend should not invite them to do it under these circumstances.

Mr. HOWE. I cannot withdraw the invitation; it has gone out.

Mr. WEST. In order to ascertain what the Senate is disposed to do and to bring them to an absolute vote, I move to lay the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana moves to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 22, noes 21.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that they have just overruled a precedent they very foolishly established the other day. I am very glad to know the fact, and I want it entered on the record. This motion to lay on the table was ruled out of order the other day, but now I see the Senate has got sensible again and adopted the correct course of proceeding.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is out of order now.

Mr. MORTON. I call for the regular order, the post-office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In response to what was stated by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] the Chair will state that on reference to the RECORD and the JOURNAL he finds this to be the condition of the question on the post-office appropriation bill: All the amendments made in Committee of the Whole were concurred in with one exception, the bill having been reported to the Senate with the understanding that the motion made by the Senator from Louisiana to strike out from the eighteenth to the twenty-seventh line of the second section should be pending in the Senate; and that is the question now before the Senate. The question is on concurring in the amendment striking out the clause.

Mr. MORTON. What is the clause to be stricken out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is to strike out from line 18 to line 27 of section 2, which the Clerk will report.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

That so much of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1873," approved June 1, 1872, as relates to and authorizes a contract to be made by the Postmaster-General with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for steamship service between San Francisco, Japan, and China, is hereby repealed, and any such contract made by the Postmaster-General in pursuance of said act is hereby annulled.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish merely to say that I shall vote against striking out that provision in the House bill. I do so, although I am aware that there are certain considerations which may influence Senators in voting to strike it out. After a careful consideration of the legal question, I came to the conclusion that that contract is no longer obligatory upon the Government; that we have a perfect right to treat it as forfeited by the steamship company, and therefore to refuse to execute the contract. Believing that, the question presents itself to my mind in this light, that by waiving that forfeiture we in effect make a new contract for eight years and three-quarters.

When this subsidy was granted I opposed it. I voted against it and spoke against it for reasons satisfactory to me, and I have opposed every such subsidy since I have been a member of the Senate and all railroad subsidies; and in doing so I have conformed to the oft-expressed wishes and opinions of the people of my State and the solemnly expressed opinion of the Legislature of the State. I do not feel at liberty now, when the Government is freed from this contract, to give it vitality, and thereby in effect create a new subsidy. If there is any question upon which the people of Ohio are perfectly unanimous or as near so as any community can be, it is on the question of granting subsidies by Congress in bonds, in lands, or in money; and the resolutions of the conventions of the two parties speak the same sentiment upon this question, and the resolutions of the Legislature were never party resolutions, but passed I believe almost or quite unanimously. Under such circumstances I feel myself instructed to vote against subsidies, and being freed, as I think we are, from the obligations of this contract, I must vote against anything which would commit the Government to its execution, I shall therefore vote against striking out the provision in the House bill.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. President, according to the report made by the Judiciary Committee this morning, I presume that the Government of the United States is under no obligation to perform the conditions of this contract that has been made with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; and the proposition now before us on this amendment is whether or no we will repeal so much of the act as authorized this contract to be entered into. The legal question we have to a certain extent got rid of by the report of the committee. Yesterday it was a question whether we could impair the obligation of a contract, not by virtue of any power contained in the Constitution, but inasmuch as it was prohibited to the States we might infer that the Government of the United States would not of itself do that which was prohibited in the Constitution to the States. At all events it would be bad faith for the Government to repudiate a legal contract that had already been entered into, whether it could or could not be enforced. If it should do so, there would be of course claims against the Government to compensate the parties who held the contract, who had been deprived of the benefits of it by legislation. But, as I have stated, we have got rid of that question upon the report of the Judiciary Committee, if we receive that as a rule for our action here.

According to that report, the Government is under no binding obligation to pay this additional money to this company. It then leaves the subsidy as it was anterior to the passage of the act of 1872, and that is, if I understand correctly, $500,000 per annum. The act of 1872 was intended to give them $500,000 additional, which would make the subsidy in its entirety $1,000,000. If this last act should be repealed, they will still have their original $500,000 subsidy.

Now, in a commercial point of view it may be a matter of great importance to this country that we should invite the commerce of the Pacific to our coast at the port of San Francisco. It is a question between us and Europe to a certain extent whether we are to control that trade or any portion of it, or whether it is to go by other channels through the Red Sea and through the Suez Canal so-called, from Asia to New York. That is one line, and this from China to San Francisco is another. It does behoove us, in my opinion, to cultivate the most intimate commercial relations with Asia and to encourage trade from that continent to ours on the Pacific Coast rather than to allow it to fall into the other channel by the way of the Red Sea and thence to New York. That is a consideration which addresses itself to us, and in that respect we must all take an interest in the question that is presented here. Other lines have been established between China and San Francisco. An English line of steamers was put upon that route, but I believe they were bought up by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; at least there is now but one line running and that is the Pacific Mail.

In regard to myself, while I never as a principle of legislation have favored subsidies on the part of Congress either for railroad purposes or steamship purposes, on this question I am specifically instructed by the Legislature of the State of California by a resolution which passed at the last session of the Legislature to vote against any subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I feel bound to obey those instructions, although in so doing I may be acting against the commercial advantages of our coast.

Senators may be at a loss to determine why the Legislature of my State should pass a resolution of that kind instructing her Senators to vote against a subsidy to this company. I will explain it. The vessels of the company, in running down the coast of California between San Francisco and Mexico in recent years, have touched at the way ports, and they come in competition with home lines of steamers. They reduced freights and fares below a living profit; in other words, they made use of the subsidy of the Government to run off all local lines by what our people considered an unhealthy opposition and what had the appearance of a determination to monopolize the trade of our coast by crowding out all competition with a view to making exorbitant charges. Our people were of the opinion Government aid should not be granted for such purposes.

Again, they have been in the habit of bringing a class of immigrants to our shores in despite of our laws, in violation of the laws of the State of California—lewd women and coolies. When the State of California passed penal laws prohibiting this kind of immigration, the company resisted and contested them through the courts, and in despite of these laws they are yet bringing that class of immigrants to our shores. These things have irritated the people of the State of California, and perhaps under these influences that resolution instructing her Senators was passed, but it is not directed against the enterprise, not against the commercial question, not that we are unwilling to establish commercial relations with China.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. TIPTON. Will the Senate permit me to take the floor and yield my time to the Senator from California?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair a Senator cannot transfer his time under the rule.

Mr. HAGER. I do not desire to infringe the rules, and will not speak more than two minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HAGER. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California desires to be heard two minutes longer by the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. President, I do not wish to trespass upon the time of the Senate. I merely wish to state one thing, and I do so because I am a resident of San Francisco, and it is a question that particularly interests us. Under the instructions I should feel bound to vote against anything like a subsidy; but there are other matters connected with this question. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company, as I have information, publicly stated in the press of San Francisco, now have sold out all their property in San Francisco, their wharves, their warehouses and lands, to the extent of about $500,000 recently, and they have been transferred to other parties, to men connected with the Southern Pacific Railroad, and it is stated in the papers of San Francisco that the company, its franchises, and its property, will soon be transferred entirely over to the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad Companies of that State. That is a matter of grave importance, which also to a certain extent enters into the considerations of the pending proposition. Those railroad companies control all the avenues of transportation in the State of California. It has purchased and controls all the railroads; it controls all the water communication; it owns all the steamers; it has bought every railroad in the State, so that the whole people of that country are dependent entirely upon that corporation. If they do get possession of this steamship line, they will control the carrying trade between San Francisco and China, and by water via Panama to New York also. I state this for the information of the Senate.

I would not object under the circumstances that an English line should be established, if it was for the purpose of creating competition and benefiting commerce. I would prefer that we should have competition even with England than to have a monopoly which would be so oppressive and so overshadowing as that of the Central Pacific Railroad in that State with its new acquisition of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. But, as I said before, while I am very reluctant to do anything that would interfere with the commerce of that coast, and particularly with that of San Francisco and California, under the instructions of the same Legislature that elected me I shall vote against everything that looks like a subsidy to that company. This is a matter of duty, at least so I understand it, under the instructions of the Legislature of my State.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall vote against striking out that provision of the bill which repeals the subsidy to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. Originally I was opposed to the granting of that subsidy and voted against it, and I think spoke against it. Nevertheless as it was a law of the land which gave this subsidy to the company, if a contract was made under it which was a valid subsisting contract, I should not feel at liberty to repudiate it. I would not vote now to violate the contract with the company, provided there had been nothing on the part of the company to show an attempt to obtain that contract by fraud. But the Judiciary Committee or a majority of that committee have reported that there is no valid contract existing to-day between the Government and this steamship company. Therefore to vote for striking out that provision would be to re-enact a subsidy in favor of the company.

To all subsidies I am now and ever have been opposed, and I therefore cannot vote for striking out this clause, however meritorious the present owners of the company may be; and I understand it has not the same directors at least that it had when it obtained the subsidy. The same men do not now control the management of the company; but however worthy they may be as gentlemen, however great the advantages to our commerce may be from the lines of the company, I cannot vote and will not vote for any subsidy for any company if I know it; I therefore cannot vote to strike out the clause in the House bill which repeals the subsidy.

There are other considerations which it is unnecessary for me to refer to. With my general principles I could not vote for it under any circumstances, but there are other considerations which it strikes me ought to have some weight on the decision of this question. It is notorious that there was an attempt at least on the part of the then controlling managers of the company to obtain this subsidy by means of the bribery of the national Legislature. I do not say that they were successful in that effort; but there is evidence sufficient to warrant the conclusion that there was an attempt to do that. I think that even if there was a valid existing contract, in view of the fact that there was an attempt to obtain the legislation in favor of this subsidy by means of corrupting the national Legislature, we ought in justice to the character of the two Houses of Congress and in order to teach a lesson to men who approach the national Legislature with bribes in their hands, at least to put our seal of condemnation upon them.

I shall, therefore, for all these considerations, vote against striking out that clause of the bill which repeals the subsidy.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, this question gives us an opportunity to consider the general policy of the country in regard to special subsidies. Several years since my attention was called to the matter, and I then reached a conclusion which, as it appears to me, experience has justified; and that is that subsidies to special lines for the purpose of promoting the commerce of the country are open to suspicion as to the manner by which they are obtained, and in the end fail to produce the results we seek. That our commerce, and especially our foreign commerce, needs the supporting hand of the Government is beyond question; but if we enter upon a policy designed to advance and extend the commercial power of the country, it should be by a general policy, under general laws, the advantages of which should be open to all persons in the country upon precisely the same terms. If this single subsidy, including the original grant made in the last decade, had been applied directly to the promotion of the foreign commerce of the country, we should have increased that commerce to the extent of half a million tons over what it now is, and under such circumstances that nobody could have complained of the manner by which the subsidy was obtained, and everybody in the country I think would have been benefited by the results secured.

I, for one, finding that there is, as by the judgment of the Judiciary Committee it appears there is, a legal way for the country to escape from a portion of this subsidy, readily accept it.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, the law which formed the foundation on which this contract was made was passed in 1872, being an amendment to the Post-Office Appropriation bill offered in the Senate, I think, and first adopted here. In that law the Pacific Mail Company is not named, but the Postmaster-General was authorized to issue proposals for a semi-monthly mail and to accept the lowest bid and award the contract accordingly. The Pacific Mail Company was the lowest bidder, and the contract according to the law was made with that company. The Pacific Mail Company has performed up to this day the service contemplated in that contract, and performed it to the acceptance of the Post-Office Department. I understand there is no controversy upon that point.

Another point is that the Pacific Mail Company has received nothing under this contract for the service performed except the sea postages on the mail matter which it has carried.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? The Pacific Mail Company has never performed any service under this contract. The Pacific Mail Company has carried the mails in wooden ships and has had the sea postages for them, which is under another authority given to the Postmaster-General. Since we have been sitting here we have a telegram that one of these iron vessels has sailed from San Francisco, which is the first attempt at performing this contract.

Mr. CRAGIN. I was not saying that they had performed the contract in the ships that were required by the contract, but that they have carried the mail semi-monthly is beyond doubt and beyond controversy, and that they have carried it to the acceptance of the Post-Office Department is beyond controversy. That it was not carried in the iron ships provided for was due to the fact that neither this company nor any other company could possibly provide those ships in the time specified in the contract. They carried the mail in other ships and went to work to build and provide themselves with the iron vessels as fast and as soon as possible.

Since the passage of the act of 1872 the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has expended over $7,000,000 in building new vessels, and has now seven iron steamships upon this line equal to those built in any other country in the world. The Senator from Ohio says that we have had a telegram that one of these iron ships has just sailed from San Francisco. That is true notwithstanding a New York paper said that this ship in going around to California had been nearly ruined—shaken to pieces. The truth is that the Peking arrived at San Francisco, went into the dock on Monday, and on the Thursday following sailed on its voyage to China, having received slight repairs, after a voyage of fifteen thousand miles, whereas no new steamship ever built in Europe came to the port of New York, a distance of three thousand miles, without undergoing greater repairs than were necessary in this case.

Mr. President, I only rose to make the point that the service contemplated by this contract has been performed, and the fact that it was not performed in the ships required by the contract was simply because it was impossible to provide those ships. This company has at an expense of $7,000,000 provided the ships; two of them have been accepted by the Post-Office Department after having been inspected by naval officers, as coming within the provision of the law that they should be such ships as could be serviceable in time of war. Three other iron ships are on the stocks being built by this company, and it is a question now for us, it is a question for me whether by my vote I will strike down the American flag from twenty-eight steamships now carrying that flag in the Pacific Ocean, or whether I will so vote as to keep that flag upon those ships and to add to that line the three ships now being built by John Roach, the benefactor of this country, a man who is trying to revive American ship-building. For one, standing here conscious of my integrity upon this subject, and believing that every other Senator on this floor is in the same position, I shall vote as my judgment and my conscience dictate upon this question.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to say a single word in support of the report of the Judiciary Committee. I do not agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that this is a question which presents to us any consideration about the encouragement of ship-building or sympathy with Mr. Roach. It is purely a question of law. We live under a Government of delegated power, and that power is defined by law, constitutional and statutory. The Postmaster-General is only one of the agents of this Government, and acts under his delegated authority as such. The law prescribes the extent of his authority, and whenever he exceeds the authority conferred by law his act is null and void. Every individual who deals with any Department of this Government is bound to take notice of the law, which is a limitation upon the power of this contracting party for the Government of the United States.

When, therefore, the Postmaster-General undertook to enter into a contract for the carrying of this mail for the period of ten years, beginning on the 1st of October, 1873, the law specifically defined the extent of his power to contract. That power was limited by certain requirements and conditions specified therein. One of those conditions was that these mails were to be carried by vessels of certain dimensions and capacities, to be inspected in a certain way, and to commence their service from San Francisco on the 1st of October, 1873. They failed in that condition. The Postmaster-General had no power, in my judgment, to dispense with that condition. If he could dispense with it for nine months and could dispense with a tender of those vessels at the point specified in the law and receive them elsewhere, he could have dispensed with it for the entire term of ten years.

Aside from this view, this is one of the most important questions that the Senate can be called upon to consider. It is the question of limiting every agent of the Government to the law as it is written as the only source of his authority and the conditions and limitations upon his power. Whenever you confer upon a public officer, whether the head of a Department or a subordinate, the discretion to dispense with the requirements of the law, then you have no safeguard.

I have nothing, however, to say as to how this subsidy was obtained. That question was not confided to the committee. I have no question presented to me as to the equities of these parties here; but I say as a simple matter of law Senators should adhere to it, and not allow their sympathies, not allow their faith in what they believe to be the hardship of this particular case, to dispense with the principle of holding officers of this Government responsible to the power conferred and confined by law. That is our only safeguard, and I hope the Senate will adhere to it.

Mr. SCOTT. I have never looked at the record to see, and without looking I do not remember how I voted when this subsidy was before Congress in 1872. I have always favored the policy of encouraging and building up our commerce. It is just as probable that I voted for it as that I voted against it. I voted as I believed to be right at the time. But this proposition brings us to view this subject as it is now presented in three lights:

First. The effect that this repeal is to have upon our commerce;

Second. The power of our executive officers in making contracts under the laws of Congress; and Third. It cannot be disguised the question of the purity of congressional legislation is dragged into this business.

So far as the question of extending and sustaining commerce is concerned, it is idle for me to think of going into a discussion of that question under the five-minute rule. I should vote for everything that my duty will permit me to sustain for the purpose of building up and extending our commerce. I am under instruction from the Legislature of Pennsylvania, given in May, 1874, "to oppose any cancellation of the contract entered into by the Postmaster-General for the carrying of the mails to China and Japan, if it be shown there has been due diligence used in the construction of the required ships." So far as that question is concerned, it would seem that the Postmaster-General accepted the ships and they have been approved; but the Judiciary Committee this morning report that the Postmaster-General in doing that exceeded his authority; that the law did not permit him to accept those ships; and for several reasons they say that his acceptance of them is void. Under the law, as they state it, no question of due diligence enters into it, and since the instructions referred to were given other and very grave considerations have entered into the case.

The question is presented whether we ought to repeal this contract, either because of its illegality or because of the cloud which has been thrown upon this whole business by the investigation into the passage of the law under which it was made. If under that law the advertisements had brought another bidder to the Postmaster-General and another company had received and made this contract, no clamor of a newspaper press, particularly of that part of the press which is itself shown to have been a large participant in this company's corruption fund, could drive me to do any injustice to a party who had in good faith entered into such contract. But when we find the same company which made an exhibition—I think I do not use too strong terms to say—of business idiocy in squandering $750,000 upon the despicable class of "bummers" that surround all political capitals, the professional lobbyists, newspaper reporters, and proprietors who talk about corruption in the public men of the nation, and then illustrate their own purity and disgrace their profession by running their hands up to their shoulders into every corruption fund they can get hold of—I say when we find this company is yet the contractor, and is now claiming the benefit of the contract, ought we, because the management has been changed, to be deterred from repealing this law? If it be necessary to support our commerce to make a new contract, let us at least take it out of the hands of that company which instrumentally has been the means of spreading odium over Congress, when Congress itself is shown, so far as the investigations have gone, to have been almost without exception among its members guiltless of participating in this corruption fund. Honesty must be inculcated upon commerce as well as upon Congress.

Under the report of the Judiciary Committee that this contract is not authorized by law, that the Government is not bound to carry it out, I shall vote to retain this provision in the bill, even although to my regret other parties may incidentally suffer as a consequence. I know we have the power to repeal it even if there were no cause, but, as I have already said, no clamor would drive me into taking the position of that celebrated politician in New York who because he had the power exercised it, and then asked the innocent sufferers, "What are you going to do about it?" I cannot vote, therefore, to maintain this contract, because it is in the hands of the parties who by their crime and folly have been instrumental in raising this clamor, and because that contract is not authorized by the law, according to the report of the Judiciary Committee. I think it is a fair case for the exercise of our power to repeal it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I did not sign the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, and perhaps it is proper that I should very briefly give my reasons for not coming to the conclusions that the majority of the committee arrived at. I do so with great deference to their opinion. The act of 1865 authorized the Postmaster-General to make a contract with the lowest bidder to carry the mail from San Francisco to Japan and China in American sea-going vessels of not less than three thousand tons burden. The act of 1872 authorized the Postmaster-General to make a contract for the additional monthly transportation of the mail on the same conditions and limitations and rates as provided in the act of 1865. The primary object of the contract was the additional monthly transportation of the mails. Now, if the Postmaster-General had made his contract strictly according to the law and contracted that the mails should be carried in vessels of three thousand tons burden, the law would have been fulfilled. And if the company had possessed vessels enough to enable them to carry the mails semi-monthly, that was all that would have been required of them, and there would have been no need of other vessels. But the act, looking to the fact that the additional service would require more vessels, provided that any "steamships hereafter accepted" shall be of four thousand tons burden and be adapted to the naval service of the United States. The act fixes no time at which those new steamers are to be furnished. The only time mentioned in the statute is the time that the monthly transportation of the mail is to commence, which is in October, 1873. The Postmaster-General, however, made a contract more exacting than required to do by the statute, and provided in the contract that this new monthly transportation of the mails should be carried in steamers of four thousand tons burden and that the steamers must be ready by the 1st of October, 1873. My opinion is that if the Postmaster-General had the power, as the agent of this Government, to insert a provision in the contract as to the time the steamers should be ready, he had also, as the agent of the Government, the right to extend the time at which they should be ready, or to waive the condition as to the time by which the steamers should be constructed.

But, Mr. President, take another view of this subject, and admit that the contract is as a majority of the committee hold, only as the law itself required that the new monthly service commencing October, 1873, was to be performed in steamers adapted to the naval service and of four thousand tons burden, and I still insist that the Government of the United States is bound by the contract, although the steamers were not furnished at the time specified by the contract. The Government of the United States has waived the condition that the steamers should be furnished by October, 1873. The primary object of the contract was the transportation of the mails from October, 1873, and the Government accepted that service; it received the benefits of the contract after the date that it is now claimed it became void and not binding. The manner in which the mail should be carried was a secondary and incidental provision of the contract. It is as though one made a contract with another to have oil transported from his wells to the sea-board in iron tanks, to be furnished on the 1st of October, 1873. The contractor carries the oil in wooden cisterns from the time specified, and does so for months, and subsequently the contractor furnishes the iron tanks, and an agent accepts them. I think that would be a waiver of the want of compliance with the specific condition as to the time the iron tanks were to be furnished.

But not only did the United States accept the service; the Government stood by when it was notorious and well known to it that millions were, after the time specified for the steamers to be ready, being expended in building these ships in order to perform the contract, and the United States did not notify the company that it would hold the contract void for the want of a strict compliance with its terms. Not only that, sir; after October, 1873, when this forfeiture had taken place, if it ever took place, the Government directed that those steamships should be inspected according to the provisions of the law by the officers of the Navy, and they were so inspected and approved. If the steamers had not conformed to the requirements of the law the company would undoubtedly have been induced to go on and make them conform to those requirements. The United States could have compelled the company to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have but a word or two more to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the Senator may proceed. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. After those ships had been inspected the Postmaster-General, acting under the advice of the Attorney-General of the United States to the effect that the contract was still binding, accepted the steamers and sent them to the Pacific where they are performing the service. Again the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads reported to Congress that the contract had not been fulfilled in the point of time the steamers were to be ready, but advised that, notwithstanding that fact, the acceptance of the vessels and that the contract should not be annulled. Congress received their report and took no adverse action on it. The Government of the United States acquiesced. We are told that the agent of the United States cannot bind the United States, but I take it that the Government can bind itself. Congress, by not speaking when the committee spoke to it, by not saying "we hold the contract void," accepting their report virtually agreed to it, and thus Congress itself waived the condition that those vessels should be ready at the day named in the contract. In my opinion that contract under the circumstances would not be held void between individuals, and I cannot so hold where the Government is a party, notwithstanding I am opposed to subsidies.

This is a brief and imperfect statement of the reasons which have prevented my signing the report. I state them with great deference to the opinion of the majority of the committee.

Mr. THURMAN. I have but a word to say. It is true that Congress did not pass an act affirmatively annulling that contract and affirmatively disapproving of those reports made by committees, but it did what was equivalent to that; it refused to make any appropriation for it.

Mr. WEST. I merely wish to remind the Senate now of the circumstances under which I yesterday submitted this proposition to them: "With a view of giving this company the opportunity to be heard through the expression of opinion from a more proper committee," and "getting a vote of the Senate whether they will hear from a more appropriate committee than the Committee on Appropriations." I moved "to strike out the clause relating to the Pacific Mail Company." In the mean time the appropriate committee, the Committee on the Judiciary, having been heard from and the report having been read, I think all that I wanted to accomplish in interposing this temporary delay has succeeded. I therefore desire to withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Louisiana to strike out the paragraph is withdrawn.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I submit the same motion which has just been withdrawn by the Senator from Louisiana, and I call for the yeas and nays on the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island moves to strike out from lines 18 to 27 inclusive of section 2, being the amendment just withdrawn by the Senator from Louisiana; and upon that question he asks the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON. May I ask exactly the question now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is moved to strike out the following clause in the second section of the bill:

That so much of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1873, approved June 1, 1872, as relates to and authorizes a contract to be made by the Postmaster-General with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for steamship service between San Francisco, Japan, and China, is hereby repealed, and any such contract made by the Postmaster-General in pursuance of said act is hereby annulled.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I shall take some occasion other than now, as I am not prepared, to give my views in reference to this question. I am not now prepared to do so but will seek an early opportunity.

Mr. HAGER. I merely desire to say what I did not state before, that I would have voted for striking this paragraph out and leaving the subsidy to remain had it not been for the report of the Committee on the Judiciary this morning against the validity of the subsidy contract. On the question now to strike it out I wish to state what is now the condition of this company to the public. My inclinations would favor this line of steamships as an opposition line and in behalf of commerce between San Francisco and New York. It has been for some time past, and perhaps is yet, an opposition line to the overland route by railroad. A few years back an arrangement was made between the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and the railroad company, by which they agreed upon a tariff for freight and also for passengers for their mutual advantage, so that during the existence of that contract it was not in fact a competing line. If this steamship company have now sold out, as it is reported, all their franchises and property to the railroad or some members of that company, it is no longer a competing line, and our people on the Pacific Coast will not take the same interest in it that they would otherwise have taken if it was in fact an opposition line, and to that extent a relief to the people. As a competing line it did afford some relief against the oppressions that exist there against the monopoly of the railroad company; but if this steamship line goes under their control and management, our people will be beyond any relief so far as I am able to penetrate in the future; because there is no power there that can compete against the railroad company if they also own or control this line of steamships, and thus control commerce and passenger travel between San Francisco and Asia and via Panama to the Atlantic States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I simply wish to say one word. I am opposed to subsidies; I believe that they cripple private capitalists and do more injury than good to the nation; but I shall vote against repealing this contract, because I deem that the faith of the United States is pledged.

Mr. MORTON. Having voted against this subsidy and having done all in my power to prevent the grant, I dare to do what I think is right about it now that the contract has been made. The law did not require the Postmaster-General to contract for the building of new ships at all. The law authorized him to contract with this or any other company for this new monthly service, using old ships, provided they were three thousand tons burden and American built, but the Postmaster-General in the exercise of this discretion—

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MORTON. Of course, if it is not to be taken out of my time. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time cannot be extended except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WRIGHT. It is in the line of the Senator's argument. In what part of the law does the Senator find that the company was not bound to furnish the class of ships provided for in the act of 1872?

Mr. MORTON. I have the act here, but I will not take the time to read it. I say the law did not require the Postmaster-General to stipulate for the building of new ships, but it provided that new ships hereafter received into the service should not be less than four thousand tons burden, but it did not require a new ship. The Postmaster-General, however, in the exercise of his discretion, did contract for the building of new ships of not less than four thousand tons burden to be put into the service as early as October, 1873. That stipulation was discretionary upon his part. It might have been left out and the law complied with, but he put it in. The ships were not furnished on the 1st of October, 1873. They could not be built in that time, and he ought to have known it, and the company ought to have known it. But they were furnished a year afterward. The Postmaster-General, under the advice of the Attorney-General, waived the time and accepted the ships. They were inspected by the Navy Department as required by law and on that inspection accepted, and after that accepted by two committees of Congress; and now the position of the Judiciary Committee is that because they were not furnished by the 1st of October, 1873, the contract was forfeited. This goes upon the ground that the Postmaster-General could not waive the time. If he exercised a discretionary power in fixing that time in the contract, and was not required to do so by the law, then he had equal discretionary power to waive the time and fix it a year later. Can anybody deny that as a proposition of law? It seems to me not; and that is the whole of this question, as I understand, so far as the forfeiture is concerned. He was not required to make that stipulation; it was discretionary with him; and if he did make it, it was discretionary with him to waive the time for six months, or twelve months, or even for two years. He did waive the time under the advice of the highest law officer of this Government. Two committees of Congress said that he had a right to waive the time. The company went on and constructed their ships at great expense. Now we are required to say that the simple failure to furnish the ships by the 1st of October, 1873, forfeited the contract and the Postmaster-General had no right to condone the forfeiture, had no right to waive the time, as a mere proposition of law. I do not agree with the majority of the Judiciary Committee. Of course I dissent from the opinion of that committee with great respect, but according to the principles of law as I understand them it was but a technical failure. The time was not of the essence of the contract, and as the stipulation was discretionary with the Postmaster-General in the first place, it was equally discretionary with him to waive that time and give them a year more. Therefore I cannot vote to repeal the contract because it was forfeited for that reason.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island to strike out the clause which has been read.

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President, it is immaterial, I suppose, whether I say anything or not; but with or without the report from the Judiciary Committee I should have had no difficulty whatever in making up my mind as to how I should cast my vote on this subject. I believe that this subsidy was procured by bribery and fraud, and that is a sufficient ground for me to place my vote in favor of its repeal. Other Senators may cast their own votes upon whatever grounds they choose; but as for my single self I make no defense and no apology for bribery and fraud, no matter in what shape or in what form they may show themselves. From the sneak-thief who adroitly purloins your handkerchief, rising through all the grades of grand and petit larceny to the lobby organized on a capital of half a million to plunder the Treasury, I condemn them all. Editors who have shared the spoils may justify and applaud, as Government and people are sweeping with headlong speed to bankruptcy and to ruin; but how long will it be before these pretended guardians of the public morals and the public welfare are called upon to record the overthrow and the utter prostration of our national, State, and municipal credit? If we stop where we are, can the wisest statesmanship avert that catastrophe?

If Congress makes an attempt to investigate one of these nefarious transactions and places one of the ringleaders on the stand, he talks sentimentally about his peculiar situation, the delicacy of his motives, his serious apprehensions that an answer to the question would involve an impropriety and inflict an incurable wound upon his honor; and after all this rignarole he coolly flaunts his defiance in the face of the committee. For this offense, which should place him for the remainder of his life beyond the pale of civilized society, rumor says he is confined for a few days in elegantly furnished apartments, where curtains of lace soften the sunlight, and where the satiated appetite is tempted by the rarest and costliest dishes.

Labor is the foundation of wealth. For every dollar that is squandered here somebody works, and the representatives of the States and the people should never cease in their efforts until these corrupting influences are expelled in disgrace from the Capitol.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I shall vote in accordance with the proposition as it comes to us from the House, simply because the company I do not think fulfilled their contract in time, and because some members of the company notoriously were ready to bribe if they could find anybody to bribe; but I do not understand that they succeeded in any instance except with one democratic member of the House.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cameron, Conover, Cragin, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Pease, Sargent, and Sprague—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Boggy, Boreman, Boutwell, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Logan, McCreery, Merriam, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Oglesby, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Stewart, Thurman, Tipton, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—52.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert Hamlin, Howe, Jones, Lewis, and Stockton—10.

So the motion to strike out did not prevail.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to say a word on the passage of this bill. I shall deal with round figures.

Mr. President, this bill appropriates about thirty-seven and a half millions of public money. Last year the appropriation was about thirty-five and a half millions, making $2,000,000 more the present year than last. Until 1853 I think the Post-Office Department was self-sustaining; in other words, it was not an expense to the public treasury. The deficiencies of this year as I make them are between eight and nine million dollars. This shows that the Post-Office Department each year is growing rapidly, and with its growth the amount of money taken from the public Treasury is growing at the rate of from one to two millions per annum; in other words, the deficiencies are increasing about a million and a half per annum.

The remarks I make now will not be followed by the offer of any amendment, because it was last night understood that we should not move further amendments; but I hope to call the attention of those who have the disposition of the money for the next year to the importance of effecting a saving in some way so as to avoid this continual increase of the burden imposed on the Treasury by our postal system. On line 11, page 1, we find—

For pay of clerks in post-offices, $3,500,000.

That is a great deal more than the corresponding item was last year. That compensation does not include any clerks employed in Washington at the main office. They are provided for in another bill. This $3,500,000 is for clerical service outside of Washington. I venture to say that there is hardly a large office in the country that has not got perhaps one-third more clerks than are necessary; and the fact that here is $3,500,000 appropriated to pay clerks outside of this city in the different post-offices shows that conclusively.

As to advertisements, I find on page 5, line 92, that this year we appropriate $100,000. Last year the amount was $80,000, and I believe that was a full average of any previous year. I find in the Postmaster-General's report that three papers of the District of Columbia were paid last year, between October and December, for advertising mail contracts for the States of Maryland and Virginia, about $7,500 each, making an aggregate of $22,500, when if the same advertising had been done in Baltimore or Richmond the amount would have been about $4,000; so that we paid about $19,000 to the papers here more than we should have paid elsewhere for the same service.

It is plain to me, Mr. President, that the Post-Office Department is growing rapidly perhaps in importance, but certainly in cost. I believe the present Postmaster-General is trying to effect reforms, and I hope that by another year he will be able to reduce the expenditures very materially. I am told that in the mail contracts let since he has been in office there are perhaps $2,000,000 saved in a single letting for the Western States.

Mr. WEST. It has been customary ordinarily in proceeding to the consideration of an appropriation bill to make some explanation of its provisions and the scale of its expenditures. Yesterday my attention was distracted at the moment when the Senate commenced the consideration of this question. The Senator from West Virginia takes occasion just at the close of the bill to comment generally upon the increased expenditure of the Post-Office Department. I have no doubt that he deprecates it as well as any other Senator or any member of Congress; but there is something more to be done besides deprecating expenditures when criticism is indulged in with regard to them. The Senator should have been prepared to point out an unjustifiable expenditure and to have advocated retrenchment with reference to that expenditure; and I will say—and he will not contradict me—that he, in connection with two other members of the committee, have been engaged all winter probing the expenditure of the Department, and neither in committee nor in the Senate does he propose any restriction or curtailment of them. He had the opportunity to do it, and I hope that in future he will put his professions into something like practice.

Mr. DAVIS. I had no idea that the Senator who has this bill in charge was going to call me to account for what I said. I think I stated that I believed the present Postmaster-General was in the line of economy and probably would by another year cut off some expenses and save a great deal of money to the Treasury. But the Senator says that I have pointed out no evil. I thought I said that a few papers in this city, the Chronicle, the Republican, and the Star, had been paid within the present fiscal year nearly $23,000 for advertising mail contracts in the States of Maryland and Virginia, which advertising if it had been done in those respective States would have cost about $4,000. I thought that was specific enough, and the Senator does not reply to it, and I take it he admits the fact.

Mr. WEST. Just one word in regard to that. The incoming Postmaster-General, as the Senator very well knows, did that in compliance with the law. He was compelled to do it; and this bill repeals the objectionable feature of that law.

The bill was passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4747) supplementary to the acts in relation to immigration, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (H. R. No. 4692) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

The bill (H. R. No. 4835) in relation to the Quartermaster's Department, fixing its status, reducing its numbers, and regulating appointments and promotions therein, was read twice by its title.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senate to put that bill on its passage. There are not more than five or ten lines in it. It is satisfactory to everybody.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Quartermaster's Department of the Army shall hereafter consist of the Quartermaster-General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier-general; four assistant quartermasters-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonels of cavalry; eight deputy quartermasters-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant-colonels of cavalry; fourteen quartermasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors of cavalry; and thirteen assistant quartermasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains of cavalry.

No more appointments are to be made in the grade of military store-keepers in the Quartermaster's Department, and this grade is to cease to exist as soon as the same becomes vacant by death, resignation, or otherwise of the present incumbents.

No officer now in the service is to be reduced in rank or deprived of his commission by reason of any provision herein.

No officer is to be promoted or appointed in the Quartermaster's

Department in excess of the organization prescribed by the act; and that so much of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1869, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1870, and for other purposes," as applies to the Quartermaster's Department is repealed.

Mr. CONKLING. Making no objection to the bill, which I have no information to warrant me in doing, I ask my honorable friend if he will state to those of us who know as little as I do the changes it makes in the existing law?

Mr. LOGAN. I will. The Quartermaster's Department consists now, taking the numbers on the statute-book, of one brigadier-general, six colonels, ten lieutenant-colonels, fourteen majors, and thirty captains. This reduces it, because there are vacancies, to four colonels and eight lieutenant-colonels, leaving off two in each of these ranks. There are actually five colonels now, and this bill makes the regular number four when a vacancy shall occur. The reduction in the Quartermaster's Department as it exists now on the register is in these two grades. I suggested the provision, and it has been passed through the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator also state what difference it makes, if any, present or prospective, to those now in the service?

Mr. LOGAN. It makes no difference whatever to those that are in the Quartermaster's Department now.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does it touch the question of rank?

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MERRIMON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4729) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAYARD, Mr. ALCORN, and Mr. JOHNSTON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. Mr. SCOTT and Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, reported amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 4729) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Finance, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be indefinitely postponed; which was agreed to:

A memorial of the Union Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, Missouri, asking for the establishment of a branch mint in that city;

A resolution of a public meeting of citizens of Chicago, Illinois, held at the Palmer House in that city, recommending the establishment of a mint at Chicago;

A resolution of the Legislature of Nebraska, in favor of the establishment of a branch mint at Omaha, in that State;

A resolution of the Legislature of Missouri, in favor of the establishment of a branch mint at Saint Louis, in that State; and

A resolution of the Board of Trade of Chicago, Illinois, in favor of the passage of a bill for the establishment of a branch mint in that city.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Finance, submitted a written report on the above bills, petitions, memorials, and resolutions in relation to establishment of branch mints; which was ordered to be printed, accompanied by the following resolution:

Resolved, That as it appears expedient to establish a branch mint for the coinage of silver, the President of the United States be requested to institute inquiries as to the proper place for the establishment of a branch mint at some point in the Western States or in the Mississippi Valley, taking into account all questions of economy and facilities of distribution, and report upon the same at the commencement of the next session of Congress.

TEXAS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. SARGENT. I trust the Senator will accord an opportunity to the Senator from Texas to be heard.

Mr. ALLISON. After the Army bill is taken up, I will consent that it be laid aside informally.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Now I ask that the Senate take up the motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill (S. No. 736) to change the boundaries of the eastern and western judicial districts of the State of Texas; and to fix the times and places of holding courts in the same. It is a meritorious bill, one that I think the citizens of Texas feel a great interest in, and I hope it may have consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it will take no time.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I understand—

Mr. DAVIS. I suppose it will be subject to a call for the regular order.

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot give way if it will occupy time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is understood that the bill if taken up is subject to a call for the regular order.

Mr. SARGENT. Subject to a reasonable call.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I hope justice may be done. I do not want technicalities.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas to take up the motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion to reconsider the vote passing Senate bill No. 736.

Mr. FLANAGAN. This bill was passed some weeks since and my colleague entered a motion to reconsider. It is a meritorious bill, and I now simply by way of saving time, which seems to be a very grand consideration with the Senate and I appreciate it, move to lay his motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. Is that debatable?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I submit to the Senate that—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Five minutes seems to be the rule, and I will allow my colleague five minutes if that will do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator withdraws his motion to lay on the table.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber when this bill passed. It was in the hands of the Judiciary Committee and reported, I believe, on the very last day of the last session of Congress, but it escaped my attention altogether and I had forgotten that it was on the Calendar. I happened to be out on the morning the Judiciary Committee had the floor and the bill passed without objection. I entered a motion to reconsider, and it has been hanging for two or three weeks. I did not care so far as I was concerned whether the bill was reconsidered or not provided it slept there. That is the truth of it. It is an iniquitous bill, not asked for by anybody in the State of Texas that I know of, except the officers of the court in one of the judicial districts in the State. The bill was concocted by the marshal of that district, I think, and under his management and auspices, with the co-operation of my colleague, it was passed. When it was pending last spring, nearly a year ago, I was invited to go before the Judiciary Committee in regard to it, and I went to the committee-room one morning and met there my colleague and, I believe, the marshal of the district and one of the Representatives in the other end of the Capitol, who had been making a statement to the committee in regard to it. The chairman said to me— "he is not in his seat now; he would recollect it if he were here—" "There is a proposition to compromise this matter, a substitute is spoken of; do you know anything about it?" I said, "No, sir; I have not seen it, and I do not know what it is." "Well," he said, "perhaps it may suit you; if it does not, and this bill is to be considered,

I will let you know and you can come before the committee, and your friends in the House who want to come before the committee will have an opportunity when you advise them." I never heard anything more about the bill in that committee. From the remarks made by the chairman of the committee I took it for granted the committee would report adversely. He so hinted to me, in fact, and I did not go before the committee, and my friends in the House complained to me for not giving them notice after they found that this bill was reported.

The judicial districts of the State, as they stand now, divide the territory unequally to be sure. While the eastern district has the smallest portion of territory and the smallest population, it has the largest amount of business. It embraces all the sea-coast towns, all the large commercial towns in the State except one. The courts at Galveston, Texas, both the district court and the circuit court, sit a greater number of days I think (and my colleague admitted it to me the other day) than all the other courts in the State put together. The marshal of that district receives fees much in excess of those of the marshal of the western district. I understand from his friends here that he says he gets the full $6,000 a year. I do not know how that may be, but I am sure the marshal of the other district does not get so much.

The diagonal line across the map which I have in my hands and that Senators can see [exhibiting a map] embraces substantially what is in the eastern district of Texas, and the proposition now is to take into it that portion of the State [indicating] embracing all the well-settled counties in the State except about thirty; and the little strip between the two lines [indicating] is to be annexed to the western district of Texas. They do not comprise a population, all told, of more than two hundred and fifty thousand people, whereas in the eastern district as proposed by this bill a million of people will be embraced with all the large towns in the State and fifteen-sixteenths of the railroads of the State. The western district is left with a little over one hundred miles of railroad, without any means of transportation except by private conveyance over a great portion of the district, with the judge required to go from his residence in the city of Austin overland through the greater portion of the distance a wilderness country, four hundred and fifty miles, to Brownsville to hold court, or else he must go by the city of New Orleans and take water there, which is fifteen hundred miles. He has written here to his friends in the other House, if this bill is passed, to ask an appropriation to pay his mileage from his residence twice a year to the city of Brownsville to hold his court.

Here are thirty or forty counties laid off. They look on the map like a portion of the State of Texas; they are a portion of the State of Texas so far as territory is concerned; but there are no inhabitants in them; the counties are not organized, and a large number of the counties that are organized outside of this line, constituting half the territory of the State, have not a population of five hundred souls in a county on the average; a great many of them have but two hundred, some one hundred and fifty, some one hundred, and so on. They are cattle ranches scattered over an immense extent of country; and the marshal of that district when he goes out to serve process, or to get witnesses, or arrest parties will have to take them by stage or by private conveyance, and it will cost him twelve and a half cents in specie a mile to travel, and he gets out of the Treasury six and one fourth cents a mile.

My colleague, I think, will own that this has not been asked for by a solitary individual in the State except the parties I have named. If there is any petition from anybody I have not been able to see it. I have a number of letters from persons who live in the vicinity of where these new courts are proposed to be holden, and they protest against it. It is proposed to hold a session of the court at Jefferson twice a year, and at Dallas twice a year; and there are about eight or ten counties around Jefferson, and I am told by a good lawyer in the other end of the Capitol, who practices at the Tyler court, that there never has been but one case originated at the town of Jefferson. The argument here is that this is a commercial point on a navigable stream, and that there is a great deal of admiralty business there; but he says there never has been but one case from that town. It is in a sickly locality, right on the lakes surrounding the raft of the Red River. The bayou is dry more than half the year; the town is perishing away; it has not half the inhabitants it had two years ago, and will be deserted, I think, after a while.

The court now sits at Tyler; and it is a central position in eastern Texas, not more than one hundred and fifty miles from any portion of that part of the State. Now, it is proposed to take the people down from almost the town of Tyler to Galveston, a distance of three hundred miles, to do their business, while a very few persons will go to the town of Jefferson, and a very few more to the town of Dallas.

The truth is this bill is intended to accommodate one or two neighborhoods and a few individuals, to the great detriment of nearly all the people of the State. I hope it will be reconsidered and sent to the committee again. I want to go before the committee, and I want the gentlemen of the other House to go before the committee; they are lawyers who practice in those courts; and if they do not satisfy the committee that it is a very improper bill to pass, I shall be greatly mistaken. If we cannot convince the committee of that fact, then I want them to provide for abolishing what remains of the western district. It is not worth keeping together. It will not pay the officers of the court; it will work the judge to death.

But that is not the worst feature of the bill. It was drawn up by some one who evidently did not know anything about or care anything about the interests of the country. Here are two large counties and a vast extent of territory lying up high on the line between Mexico and Texas not embraced in either district. The county of El Paso and the county of Presidio, and all the country that lies between there and the organized portion of the State, are absolutely left out of doors. Smuggling across there from Mexico into the United States can be practiced to an enormous extent, and nobody can be touched. You cannot bring any of them before the court. It has always been considered by the United States and by the State of Texas to be very important to have El Paso and all that section on the Rio Grande under the jurisdiction of the courts of the State and of the United States.

Sixty-five counties, with an aggregate population of 43,761 souls, all told, compose the western district under this bill. Against that they have got solid a portion of the State that was settled the earliest, the oldest and best portion of the State, settled compactly and making a district compact in form embracing a million of population. The mere statement of the condition of the thing appeals, I think, so strongly to the justice of the Senate that I hope the bill will be reconsidered and sent back to the committee.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not know that I was at the meeting of the Judiciary Committee when this bill was finally considered, nor do I think I was in the Senate when it passed; but since the motion to reconsider was made I have devoted some little attention to it. My attention has been called to it, and nothing is clearer to my mind than that the vote ought to be reconsidered and that the bill ought to be defeated. I think it is totally wrong. I think it is unjust to the people of Texas and I think it is unjust to the Government. It will increase the expenses of the people in Texas unfairly for all the business in the Federal courts there, and increase the expense to the Government. I hope, therefore, that the vote by which the bill passed will be reconsidered, and the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary or be defeated.

Mr. FLANAGAN. The distinguished Senator from Ohio uses the word "totally" very frequently and very handsomely; but he does not understand this bill. He is lecturing me and my constituents in this way, that, and the other. I am very much obliged to him for his care, but I totally repudiate the idea.

Now a word in answer to my colleague. He says that there are few persons wanting this excepting perhaps A, B, and C. Now within the last two or three days I received that petition, [unfolding a paper of great length with many signatures.] How many hundred names there are there I do not know; but they are gentlemen well known to my colleague. They say unanswerably and unmistakably that they do desire it. That is but two or three days old.

He speaks of the members of the other House. Why, sir, I would leave this matter to them in the thousandth part of a minute and be gratified to get rid of his motion and get the bill into their hands, and then I would have justice and the bill would carry without a doubt. It asks for no appropriation. As to the judge who presides at Austin, he is on the way from Galveston directly to the Rio Grande at Brownsville—three hundred miles, and not four hundred miles, as my colleague said. This equalizes it and saves money. Now when men are indicted or are summoned to go to the various district courts, they have hundreds of miles to travel. Hereafter the judges will travel to them and they are willing to do it, or not unwilling by any means. It is a meritorious bill; it is a money-saving proposition, all things considered. Time is important to the Senate, and I move now again to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I ask my colleague where that petition comes from?

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio demands the regular order, which is the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. FLANAGAN. The petition is from Jefferson.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. That is what I supposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Army appropriation bill is before the Senate, and will be read.

Mr. MORTON. Was not the regular order laid aside until this matter could be disposed of? We are ready to vote now. The Army bill is under the control of the Senator from Iowa, is it not?

Mr. ALLISON. If this matter does not take up too much time I will not object to disposing of it.

Mr. FLANAGAN. No time will be taken. I am ready for the vote.

Mr. THURMAN. I demanded the regular order because the Senator from Texas moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, thereby cutting off all reply to what he had said. I therefore insist on my call for the regular order.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I move to postpone the regular order so that this matter may be disposed of.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I had the permission of the Senator—

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object; but I do not want the regular order postponed.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I have no disposition to postpone it; but I simply want a vote on the reconsideration. I move to lay on the table the motion for reconsideration.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I understand the Senator asks to postpone the regular order temporarily in order that the vote may be reached on his proposition. I really think it is of sufficient importance to call upon us to vote on it one way or the other.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves that the Army appropriation bill be postponed for the purpose of taking the vote on the reconsideration of Senate bill No. 736, or upon laying the motions to reconsider on the table.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas now moves that the motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 736 was passed be laid on the table.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamlin, Ingalls, Kelly, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Pease, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Stewart, West, and Windom—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Pratt, Saulsbury, Schurz, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Boggs, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conover, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Oglesby, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Wright—30.

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONOVER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1350) to remove a restriction upon the right of Representatives-elect to receive their pay during the recess of Congress; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1351) for the relief of Mrs. Caroline Clark, of Ferdinandina, Florida, for property destroyed by United States gun-boats in 1862; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3820) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Secretary will read the bill, and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations was in line 41, after the word "engineers," to strike out the word "and;" and after the word "scouts," in line 42, to insert "and Indian prisoners;" and in the same line to strike out "12,000" and insert "84,330;" so that the clause will read:

For subsistence of regular troops, engineers, and Indian scouts, and Indian prisoners, $2,484,330, not exceeding $3,000 of which may be used for subsisting Indians visiting military posts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. The bills which have been laid on our tables do not appear to contain the amendments which the Clerk reads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments have not been printed. The bill was reported from the committee this morning.

The next amendment was in line 45, to strike out the word "remaining" before the word "sum;" so as to read:

Provided, That $300,000 of the sum thus appropriated may be applied by the Commissary-General of Subsistence, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was in line 74, to insert before the word "fourth" the word "August;" so as to read:

For incidental expenses, to wit, under the acts of March 2, 1819, and August 4, 1854.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 94, after the word "shoeing;" to insert the words "the horses of;" so as to read:

And for shoeing the horses of the corps named.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 143, to strike out the words "and next fiscal year" and insert in lieu thereof "fiscal year, nor thereafter;" so as to read:

That the foregoing restriction shall not apply for the current fiscal year, nor thereafter, to roads where the sole condition of transportation is that the company shall not charge the Government higher rates than they do individuals for like transportation, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the last proviso in this paragraph, beginning in line 149, in these words:

And provided further, That hereafter when troops or officers change stations their families shall receive transportation over land-grant and subsidized railroads which receive no payments from the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to ask the Senator his object in having that paragraph stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. This last proviso requires the railway companies or the Government to transport the families of troops or officers. I know of no law which authorizes or directs such transportation. These land-grant railroads are obliged to transport troops and munitions of war, but they are not required to transport the families of officers or troops. Under this provision the Government itself would be obliged to pay for the transportation of the families, and it would require an increase of the appropriation for the purpose of transportation.

Mr. LOGAN. I will only say that I have not considered the question at all, but it occurs to me that it is a very proper provision in the bill. Very frequently troops are ordered to be removed without delay to a great distance, having families, as many soldiers and many officers have, and sometimes you find the line officers, especially of low rank, without sufficient means to pay the traveling expenses of their families. I have known that to occur very frequently, and certainly it is so with soldiers having families; and when they are transported, as they are sometimes, from the West to the East or South, it is a great inconvenience. I think the Government ought to provide some means for transporting the families of line officers and troops. Hearing that provision in the bill read, I thought it was very properly inserted; but, however, it seems there is some objection to it.

Mr. ALLISON. It might be a very good proposition as an independent one, but the Senator from Illinois will see that it would be very difficult for us to estimate the cost of the transportation of the families of soldiers without having some data that we have not now and cannot obtain.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not suppose there are any data that could be obtained at present. I do not suppose you can get any from the War Department at this time. It strikes me it is a very proper provision. I agree with the Senator, however, that you could not impose this upon the land-grant railroads any more than any other railroads. I am of opinion that they are only bound for the transportation of munitions of war and troops. I have no objection to it as an independent proposition. It strikes me there is nothing very wrong in it.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the proviso will be stricken out.

Mr. BAYARD. I regret to delay the Senate for an instant, but the fact that we have this bill before us to be passed upon without the amendments being in print renders it difficult to understand it. Do I understand the amendment of the committee to be to strike out from line 149 to line 152 on page 7 the provision that the families of troops or officers shall receive transportation over land-grant railroads, and to exclude the subsidized railroads from carrying troops or officers and their families? Has the committee made yet any explanation why the subsidized railroad should be exempted from this partial method of making return to the Government of Government dues?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Delaware that the provision relating to transportation over land-grant railroads applies to troops and munitions of war. It does not occur to the committee that the families of soldiers or officers are either troops or munitions of war. If there was any law requiring these land-grant railroads thus to transport, of course the provision would be a proper one.

Mr. BAYARD. It strikes me that any way by which the Government shall obtain some return from these subsidized roads, not unlawful, should be adopted. The debt of the subsidized roads to the Treasury of the United States is very far in excess of what it should be, we all know. Therefore, if this proposed amendment is to diminish the small return from these roads to the Government of the United States for its outlay, I should be opposed to it and I think it should not be adopted.

Mr. WEST. There is truth in what the Senator from Delaware says, if this profit or advantage would inure to the Government; but when troops and munitions of war are moved the Government never moves the families of officers and soldiers. Consequently to adhere to this provision is an equivalent to a gratuity to these families at the expense of the land-grant railroads. It does not benefit the Government at all. It does not benefit anybody but the families, and the companies have to pay the expense. When officers or troops are moved, the officer is not obliged to take his wife with him. He is not allowed to take his wife with him at Government expense. He is allowed to take one or two or three servants, according to his rank. There are certain camp women, known as laundresses, two of which always go with each company, but no family of an officer is ever allowed to travel with him at Government expense. In this instance it would make these land-grant railroads do for these families what the Government does not do under other circumstances.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Louisiana states that if this provision were retained it would give to the families of officers or troops transportation at the expense of the subsidized or land-grant railroads. Now if there be not a provision which makes it the duty of the land-grant and subsidized railroads now to carry these families, then the effect of this provision is a legislative enactment giving this privilege to officers with families at the expense of the Government. It would be, if you permitted it to stand. If the duty is already imposed on the railroads, it does impose as a legislative provision to give transportation to officers and troops and their families at the expense of the Government.

Mr. WEST. Not at all; it says the land-grant railroads shall carry them for nothing.

Mr. SCOTT. It does not provide that they shall receive free transportation; simply that they shall receive transportation over these roads.

Mr. WEST. Then the section is all the worse.

Mr. SCOTT. I say it is all the worse.

Mr. ALLISON. The effect of this proviso is to allow these families to pass over these railroads either at the expense of the Government or at the expense of the railroads. Now, if there is no provision by which they shall go at the expense of the railway the Government of course will be required to pay these expenses and we ought to increase the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to strike out the proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in line 159, to increase the appropriation for hire of quarters for officers on military duty; hire of quarters for troops; of store-houses for the safe-keeping of military stores, offices, and of grounds for camps and summer cantonments, and for temporary frontier stations; for the construction of temporary huts and stables; and for repairing public buildings at established posts, from $1,400,000 to $1,500,000.

Mr. DAVIS. The appropriation for this purpose last year was $1,400,000. The present bill as it passed the House appropriated only $1,400,000, and the committee recommend to increase this appropriation $100,000. I hardly think it ought to be done. It is a very large amount, and I call the attention of the Senate to the fact. I should like to hear an explanation in regard to it.

Mr. ALLISON. The Quartermaster-General reports that the amount appropriated last year is insufficient to comfortably house and care for all the troops on our frontiers, and that an additional $100,000 at least will be required to provide for the comfort of our soldiers at frontier posts. During the last year the Quartermaster-General has kept strictly within the amount appropriated. He says very great complaint has come to him from every quarter of the West. The amount estimated for this year was $1,900,000. The committee thought under the circumstances it would be wise to add $100,000 to the appropriation. It is for the Senate to decide whether that shall be done.

Mr. DAVIS. This is $100,000 increase, and I think probably we ought to get along without it. It is well known that everything that is used for the Army, as well as generally through the country, can be purchased at less amounts now than some years ago. Labor is less, and it occurs to me that $1,400,000 ought to be adhered to, and that we ought not to advance this appropriation $100,000. It is that much more than we have heretofore got along with. The Army is decreasing instead of increasing, and I see no reason for increasing the amount $100,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment. The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Evidently there is a quorum present.

Mr. SHERMAN. Put the question again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon suggestion the Chair will again put the question.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Let the Clerk report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in line 159, to strike out "$1,400,000" and insert "$1,500,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For hire of quarters for officers on military duty; hire of quarters for troops; of store-houses for the safe-keeping of military stores, offices, and of grounds for camps and summer cantonments, and for temporary frontier stations; for the construction of temporary huts and stables; and for repairing public buildings at established posts, $1,500,000.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, these appropriations should be always ample and sufficient. That is required by a sound sense of economy. These appropriations are based upon estimates from the Departments sent to the committee of the other House, by whom the bill is framed and the amounts entered for proper expenditures; but when the bill has passed the House it is not, as I am informed, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, the members of which committee have not seen this bill at all in print until they see it now without the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

There has been in my hearing no reason given why the sum of $100,000 should be added for this class of expenditures, all of which are thoroughly well understood by the Department, have been passed upon by the Department, have been passed upon by the committee of the lower House and by the House itself; and why they are now increased and this extra sum of $100,000 added no explanation has yet been given. We all know that at the present session of Congress there is an alleged deficit in the revenues of the country and that increased taxation is proposed to meet that deficit. If the deficit does exist, if the sinking fund and the proper debts of the country cannot be paid, I am willing to vote for an increase of taxation, but I shall not do so until some attempt has been made to diminish the expenditures of the country. In every bill that we have had brought us here thus far, so far from there being a diminution there has been an increase in the appropriations.

It may be that to the minds of some gentlemen this item of $100,000 is a mere bagatelle; but, as was well and forcibly said by the honorable Senator from Kentucky who sits on my right, [Mr. McCREERY,] every dollar of money that passes to the Treasury is the result of some man's labor. Here is $100,000 proposed to be added to the public expenditure in excess of the estimate by the Department, in excess of the recommendations of the committee of the lower House, in excess of the amount voted by the lower House, and with nothing apparently to recommend it but the purpose of a more liberal expenditure.

One fact I believe is admitted to be a certainty, that however great your appropriations, your expenditures will always keep pace with them; that no excess of appropriation is ever allowed to remain unexpended. Therefore it seems to me it will be an unauthorized and extravagant use of money if we permit $100,000 to be added to the public debt by this appropriation. If there be reasons why it should be added, I think they should be stated specifically. The amendment is in contradiction of the estimate of that Department from which the other House obtained the estimate.

Mr. BOGY. We are called upon here to vote for an appropriation of millions of dollars and not one word of information accompanies the bill presented to us for our votes. I came here but a short time ago and am a very inexperienced man in this body; but I think I am learning a little every day. I think I am learning slowly, but I can begin to understand how the expenditure of this nation has grown within my day and within my recollection from $30,000,000 to $300,000,000. I begin to see through it. I defy any Senator on this floor to vote intelligently on this bill. He cannot do it. He must take the bill as presented to him. There is no information; no report. I understand that this bill has not been submitted even to the Committee on Military Affairs. It comes alone from the Committee on Appropriations, and we are called upon in this case for an augmentation of a hundred thousand dollars in a single item, without one word of explanation why this increased amount should be voted for. I will read as a curiosity the very clause which it is proposed to amend and on which I am now addressing the Senate:

For hire of quarters for officers on military duty; hire of quarters for troops; of store-houses for the safe-keeping of military stores, offices, and of grounds for camps and summer cantonments, and for temporary frontier stations; for the construction of temporary huts and stables; and for repairing public buildings at established posts, $1,400,000.

Supposing it had been $250,000, $3,000,000, or any other sum, could any Senator here vote intelligently? Would he know that he was voting for an amount sufficient reasonably to accomplish the purpose? You can put any amount you choose under this verbiage. I am not finding fault with the committee; I am not finding fault with the party in power; but it does seem to me that this mode of appropriation has no limit. The reason why the expenses of this nation have increased within my recollection, although perhaps I am one of the youngest members on this floor, from $30,000,000 to $300,000,000 is the wild, extravagant way of appropriating the public money.

Here it is proposed to appropriate $1,400,000 in this one item. Suppose the bill had said $400,000 or $200,000, Senators would not know any better. You cannot tell whether the amount asked for is the amount required to accomplish the object or not. It does seem to me that a bill of this kind ought to have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in order to have all these items scrutinized.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does my honorable friend suppose that the Committee on Appropriations have only appropriated this money with the information that pertains to him alone?

Mr. BOGY. No, sir; I have no information on the subject, and yet I am called upon to give a vote.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If my honorable friend will allow me, I will tell him that there is no mystery about this; that there is nothing in the dark about it.

Mr. BOGY. I do not charge anything of that kind.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will refer my honorable friend to the sources where he can inform himself accurately whether this is a just appropriation or not, whether it will meet the public expenditures, leave a surplus or be extravagant, or whether it is exactly within what is found by experience to be the necessities of the service. The Army since my honorable friend can recollect, and a great while longer, has been an establishment in this country. It works within certain principles and certain rules. When we have thirty thousand men, we know about how much it will take to support them in times of peace. Of course how much it will cost for transportation and the like will depend upon circumstances, whether it is peace or war; but all the estimates are made based upon actual experience of what it costs from year to year. That is the basis of each estimate. How do we test that to find whether we want more or less? We take every item of expenditure, every item of appropriation in this bill and compare the actual expenditure with that estimate. Take this particular item. The estimate now for this year is so much. We find by examination of the actual expenditure that there is a deficiency of about $150,000 to be made up this year on this item because we did not appropriate enough last year by that much. That leads us, therefore, to believe that unless the system is wrong, or working wrong in some way, we had better increase this item $100,000 than to put it in a deficiency bill next year.

If my honorable friend will excuse me for interrupting him so much, I will direct his attention to the methods by which, if the Committee do their duty, they can state to the Senate with as much accuracy and certainty as the public service will allow anybody to do, about what we can afford to appropriate.

Mr. BOGY. This proves the system to be very vicious. The argument of my friend from Maine amounts to this: That because last year the sum of $1,400,000 was appropriated and was not sufficient by from one hundred to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, hence this year we must increase it by the amount of the deficit of last year. That may be correct in one way, but it amounts simply to this: Here are twenty-five or thirty million dollars, appropriated for the Army, and a bill can be drawn in five lines, "Gentlemen of the Army, expend this money in the best way that you think proper for the public good, within the line of your duty," and there is really nothing else in this bill. I do not say so with a view of finding fault with the Army or in criticism of the Army, or even of finding fault with the Committee on Appropriations. It may be that there is no remedy, and if there be no remedy then these expenses will go on increasing until they will overwhelm this nation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does my honorable friend mean to say to the Senate that the expenses of the Army have been increasing comparatively?

Mr. BOGY. They have got up to twenty-five or twenty-eight million dollars, I think.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. When were they less?

Mr. BOGY. They were less when our Army was less. I will not be precise on that point.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. When was the Army less?

Mr. BOGY. Before the war.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. At what period before the war?

Mr. BOGY. For a long time. The Army has been increased from six thousand up to twenty-five thousand.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Take 1860. That was before the war. Was the expense more or less?

Mr. BOGY. Before the war commenced, perhaps in proportion the expense might be as great. I am not prepared to say.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend was never a more mistaken man in the world than he is on this point. The expenses of this Army to-day are less than they were in 1860.

Mr. BOGY. I think my friend is mistaken. The expenses were not from twenty-five to thirty millions then.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend is greatly mistaken in supposing that the expenses of the Army or Navy of the United States, comparatively, are greater now than they have been in the last twenty years.

Mr. BOGY. My friend uses a word which qualifies all his argument, "comparatively."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Of course you can only speak of it comparatively.

Mr. BOGY. I am not finding fault, but I do say that there is no limit. As an illustration, here I am called upon to vote on this amendment. My responsibility on this subject is no less than that of any other Senator on this floor. Why should I vote for this increase? Because the committee thinks it is right? The committee may be right. I have great regard for the committee, great regard for the Senator from Maine, great respect for his judgment. No doubt they are disposed to economize, but there is something wanting somewhere when we are called upon to vote for an increase or a decrease without knowing that we should do one or the other. Upon that subject I am unable to vote, and I repeat I know as much about it as any other Senator on this floor because I take it for granted no one understands the subject at all. My friend from Maine said "comparatively." Of course that qualifies the whole thing. I have no fault to find, but there is some information that we need which is lacking somewhere, and it is a farce to require us to vote on a subject that we are not informed about at all.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to limit debate to five minutes on amendments to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves to apply the five-minute rule to amendments on the pending bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri seems to think that the Committee on Appropriations ought to visit personally all these barracks and cantonments and summer resorts and winter resorts for the troops of the United States, and because we have not done so he informs us that we have no information upon this subject. If he will turn to the Book of Estimates, he will see that the Quartermaster-General of the Army has estimated for this purpose $1,900,000 for the present year, whereas the appropriation as proposed by the committee is $1,500,000 only. The Quartermaster-General of the Army stated to the Committee on Appropriations that the amount appropriated last year was insufficient for the comfortable care of the troops on the frontier posts.

Mr. BOGY. That is the whole argument.

Mr. ALLISON. Some things must be taken on faith. The whole of this expenditure is under the control and direction of the Quartermaster-General of the Army. Unless Senators make statements to the contrary, we are bound to presume that this money will be faithfully expended in the direction indicated by the appropriation. I have never heard anything against the integrity or the ability of the Quartermaster-General of the Army with reference to these expenses. He says to the committee that this additional sum is required. Of course the committee did not enter into all the details of this expenditure. It was impossible for them to do so. The committee, as the Senate, must take this additional demand upon the faith of the officers of the Army. If they cannot be believed, if they make these expenditures in an extravagant way, then I see no reason why we should appropriate $1,000,000, or $500,000, any more than a million and a half.

They say this sum is necessary for the purpose of taking care of the troops comfortably in the field. That is all the explanation that can be given.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to submit an inquiry to the Senator, and I do not do it for the purpose of trying to arrive at any of the facts which have not been communicated to the committee. What I would like to know illustrates, I think, the difficulty we all labor under in reference to this proposition. As I understand, there was $1,400,000 appropriated at the last session of Congress for quarters for officers and for the purpose of fixing quarters for the soldiers. Am I correct?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. Now the proposition is to make the appropriation $1,500,000. The quarters that were prepared last winter under that appropriation of $1,400,000 for the troops will certainly not have to be re-established. I want to know if this item is for making new quarters for troops or is it for repairing the old quarters?

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the Senator as well as I can. It is for the hire of quarters where no quarters are furnished by the Government. It is for the repair of quarters where the quarters now existing need repair. It is for the establishment of new quarters where new quarters are needed.

Mr. LOGAN. The point is this: If the quarters are established one year and it cost $1,400,000 to erect them, it certainly will not take $1,500,000 the next year to repair them.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that if he opposes this provision and states to the Senate that it is not necessary, I for one will not urge it further.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir, I will not state any such thing, and I will tell the Senator the reason. There has never been referred to the Military Committee for two years a single appropriation bill connected with the Army for that committee to examine it or make inquiries about it. For that reason I will not say whether this item is right or not. If the Committee on Appropriations would allow the Military Committee to examine these questions we would find out something about them; but we are not permitted to do it.

I am not going to oppose the appropriation, but I think I understand its meaning. An appropriation bill that provides for quarters for officers and quarters for soldiers at the same time, without an estimate, is certainly a mistake. The estimates should estimate so much for officers' quarters and so much for soldiers' quarters, because if the officers remain the same number the same amount of money will have to be expended in providing quarters every year; but the soldiers' quarters are very different. When the quarters have been established and made, you then only require money for the reparation of those quarters. That is the difference. If these quarters were sufficient last year for the soldiers, unless these soldiers have all been removed to new quarters, it will not require any such expenditure now. That is the difficulty to be got over.

Mr. WEST. It is not the first occasion that I have heard my friend from Illinois complain that a military appropriation bill does not come under the cognizance of the Military Committee except by consent. I think the Senator is familiar with the practice of acting upon appropriation bills. It is always competent for the Committee on Military Affairs having the bill printed and laid before them, either individually or as a committee, to scrutinize any contemplated appropriation; but as an evidence that the committee did not do it, and as an evidence that the Senator himself has not done it, he has entirely misconstrued the appropriation that is now before the Senate. There is nothing in this clause that provides for permanent quarters at all. On the contrary we have by previous legislation restricted the Quartermaster's Department to the expenditure of money for permanent posts so that not over $10,000 can be spent in any one quarter. This is for temporary quarters, for quarters of troops moving and fluctuating through the field, "for summer cantonments, and for temporary frontier stations; for the construction of temporary huts and stables," and the Senator knows very well that if he takes an entire corps and goes into camp, or if he takes a subdivision of that army and goes into camp he is obliged to incur some expense; and this is for that purpose. It is not for the purpose of creating permanent posts and scarcely for using money for the repair of permanent improvements. It is solely for the fluctuating movements of the Army in the field. If the Senator will look at the appropriation bill, he will so discover.

Mr. LOGAN. As to the Senator's statement about my not having read this appropriation bill, I admit it, and I do not think any other Senator has read it. It was only reported to the Senate this morning. I have had no time to read it; I never saw it before, and I could not be expected to read it, and I should like to know how it is possible for a committee to examine a bill that they never have had presented to them and know nothing about. I do not think the Senator need make a statement of that kind for the purpose of saying that I do not understand the bill. I do not say that I understand the bill, but I do say that I understand the expense of quarters either for officers or soldiers. I have made quarters; I have expended money for quarters; I acted as quartermaster in the Army many years ago, and I know something about this thing. I do state it here as a fact that when you put the whole amount of money in a bill for the repairing of quarters and the establishing of quarters and at the same time put in the words "establishment or rental of officers' quarters," there are no data upon which you can form any opinion. I say that and the committee know it. I know if you separate the amount of money for the rental of officers' and the amount of money for the repair of soldiers' quarters, it is easy then to make a calculation as to the amount it would take; but when you put them together no man can do it.

I did not get up for the purpose of opposing this appropriation, but I got up merely to ask the question if $1,400,000 established the quarters last year, will it take $1,500,000 to repair them this year? If you have changed your troops to different localities where you have to establish new quarters, that is a different proposition, and if you have it would be well enough for the Quartermaster's Department to notify the committee as to how many new quarters it is necessary to build, and how much it will take.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time on the pending amendment has expired.

Mr. LOGAN. I am very glad of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. By the thirty-fourth rule of the Senate there are various committees which are required to be appointed, and those committees are appointed, and among them is a Committee on Appropriations. I understand the practice of the Senate to be that appropriation bills coming from the House of Representatives are referred directly to the Appropriation Committee, and are ordered to be printed, and it is the duty of that committee to pass upon the appropriation bills and report them to the Senate. I find nowhere in the rules a requirement that this committee shall refer these bills to any other committee, or that they can evade the duty of considering the bills and making their report upon them.

These bills, especially at the short session, come over to us at the very close of the session. The examination which the Committee on Appropriations gives is as thorough as is possible in the time, and we always welcome light from any source, and I know that we should treat with respect any recommendation that might be made by the Military Committee. The Army appropriation bill came over a few days ago and we took it up for the first time this morning and passed upon it, and had no suggestions from the Military Committee. I am not aware that under the rules we could refer it to them, and if there is any other practice than that which I have stated, I should be glad to know it as a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not say it was necessary to refer your bills to the Military Committee. I only said if they were submitted to us we could give some information about them; but we cannot without. I will say, however, for the benefit of the Senator that at one session of Congress a member of the Military Committee was a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and in that way the Military Committee did give consideration to appropriation bills for the Army. That was changed, however, and since that I have never seen an appropriation bill until it was laid upon my table; but I am not complaining. I made no complaint; I only made that remark to show that we cannot possibly know anything about these bills.

Mr. SARGENT. I did not understand the Senator as complaining; and I simply stated what I thought to be the rule and duty of the Committee on Appropriations under the circumstances. I think myself it would be a useful addition to the Committee on Appropriations hereafter to have upon it a member of the Military Committee; and if I am to serve in this capacity again, I certainly will welcome such a member with great pleasure. We have one member of the Naval Committee and one from most of the other committees.

Mr. LOGAN. But none from the Military Committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Of course I know nothing about these estimates personally; and having listened to this debate I am not satisfied that any increase is necessary in this item. It is stated that the Department says the appropriation of last year was not sufficient. That may be true; but that may have arisen from the fact that there was not an economical expenditure of the money. Still, even if that were true and if there had been an economical expenditure of the money, yet as far as I am concerned I have no information that the same exigency will exist this year.

In the present condition of our finances we ought to use all proper economy. We are threatened with additional taxation. There is an apprehension of a deficit in the revenues of the country, and unless there be clear evidence that this amount is absolutely necessary we ought not to vote it. I apprehend that these Departments act very much as individuals do with their own money. Sometimes when we have plenty of money, we are more lavish in our expenditures than is prudent. I apprehend if the Departments are cut down to the line of economy, they will bring themselves within that line. I shall vote against this increase because I do not know that it is necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 20.

Mr. PATTERSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 24; as follows.

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Boutwell, Cameron, Clayton, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Petterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Robertson, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, and Wright—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggs, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Howe, Johnston, Kelly, Logan, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Schurz, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Washburn—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Hamlin, Jones, Lewis, Oglesby, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Wadleigh, West, and Windom—23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out from lines 167 to 169 the following proviso to the appropriation for "purchase and manufacture of clothing and camp and garrison equipage, and for preserving and repacking stock of clothing and camp and garrison equipage and materials on hand at the Philadelphia, Jeffersonville, and other depots of the Quartermaster's Department:"

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid for the use of any patent process for the preservation of cloth from moth or mildew.

Mr. CAMERON. I think we ought not to strike out that proviso. I have an impression, without any proof, that great wrong has been done to the Government by its use of patent-rights for preventing the destruction of clothing by moths. It would be better for us to wait awhile and get along without the use of this patent for another year at all events. There is plenty of clothing at the arsenals now for use, as much as will be needed probably for a year or two years, and the more you have there the more of this patent-right article for preventing destruction by moths will be called for.

To my mind it is wrong to appropriate money to be used by any officer of the Government, either civil or military or naval, without some responsibility. As I understand, large sums are drawn to be put into the hands of a patentee who sometimes controls the judgment of the officers without reflection on the part of those officers. I think we had better let the proviso stand. It was put into the bill by the House of Representatives at the suggestion of a member of Congress from a certain district in Philadelphia who understands this subject very well. I trust we shall leave the bill just as it came from the House in this respect. I do not like these patent-right monopolies in any way. There is very often some rat under the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt that what the Senator from Pennsylvania says in reference to the supply of clothing on hand is substantially true; but if it were not, and there was any necessity for clothing, I have no doubt our Pennsylvania friends would be ready to manufacture all the clothing and supplies needed for the Army in that direction. It seems hardly worth while for Congress to legislate against the use of any good invention. Therefore the committee thought it was hardly necessary to restrict the Quartermaster-General from the use of any proper invention if he could find such a one.

Mr. CAMERON. I agree with the Senator from Iowa in his premises, but the conclusions he would bring us to are not right. We ought to retain anything that is good, but we have no evidence that this thing is good.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what particular thing the Senator refers to, but this proviso prohibits the use of any patent-right.

Mr. CAMERON. I mean a patent-right to be used especially in the different arsenals of the country to protect clothing from destruction by moths. I am against all patent-rights which are not perfectly understood by this country.

Mr. ALLISON. I would suggest to my friend that if there is any particular worthless patent process we might prohibit its use; but I do not know what particular process he refers to.

Mr. CAMERON. The one now in use.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out the proviso.

Mr. WEST. It is not understood, and I ask for a division.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. If this matter is not understood I trust the Senator from Pennsylvania will make us understand it. I hope he will occupy at least five minutes in giving us some idea in respect to this amendment. The proposition put in by the House of Representatives must mean something. There must have been some appropriation of money before this period of time to those persons who have these patent processes for whatever purpose they may be intended; and the House have determined to stop it. There must be some object in view in that. If not, the proviso would not be here. Some motive prompted it, and I trust that before the honorable Senator undertakes to say that this body shall vote upon it without any knowledge on the subject at all, he will explain the reason why we should concur with the members of the committee upon this proposition.

Mr. WEST. Whom did the Senator ask an explanation from?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Anybody.

Mr. WEST. The facts are these: There has been a large amount appropriated in previous years, a special appropriation, to apply to a particular patent preparation. I do not remember what it was; but there was always a specific appropriation for it. This year it is omitted entirely, and there is no appropriation for that purpose or for that concern; but the House of Representatives in the expectation of checking that preparation has absolutely prevented the Quartermaster-General of the Army from resorting to any means to protect cloth, &c., from mildew. That is all there is of it. It is not intended to appropriate any money for anybody; but if the Quartermaster-General chooses to use some patent process to a limited extent he has the opportunity here, but there is no special appropriation; and in excluding this thing that was objectionable the House has excluded everything. That is the explanation of our motion to strike out the proviso.

Mr. CAMERON. I think the Senator from Louisiana is a little in error. The Quartermaster-General has always had a right to protect the clothes and all other property under his control. Very recently some people have invented what they call a moth-destroyer, something which will prevent moths from interfering with cloth. Everybody who knows anything about wool at all knows that every year it decreases in its strength and in its tenacity. Sometimes the officers of the Government buy too much cloth for the year, and of course it becomes weakened and injured. Then comes in some speculator who says, "I will stop all that injury; give me a sum of money which is a trifle," but it turns out in the aggregate to be a very large amount, and then he says he has prevented the cloth from being destroyed. But, sir, the moths were created when the world was instituted, and the moth is to be found everywhere. Everything earthly is perishable, and every day and every year it becomes less substantial than it was when it started. So it is with cloth, not only woolen cloth, but cotton cloth; and so of man and of animals and of everything else. A man might just as well get a patent-right to save you, Mr. President, from dying. He might make you believe, in your anxiety to live for a while, that it would preserve you; but a little while would prove that it could not help you at all. You will live as long as God intended you should, and then you will die and so will all the rest of us. These patent-rights to preserve things from decay are like many other "weak inventions" of mankind. I do not want the Government to be fleeced by any of these needy people who go about and live by their wits.

Only this morning some of us were afraid to vote in a certain way because the world might make some charge against us. I will not say we were afraid to vote, but I will say that I was myself afraid to vote because the world would charge me with doing that which was wrong, that I was voting to sustain something that had been tainted; but after a while I got over that, and I voted, as of course everybody else here did, according to my judgment; but I am willing to confess I was a little weak-kneed in the morning. So it is with the people who come here with the recommendations of the Army or Navy. They are called skilled people and bring their recommendations, and we are afraid to go against those recommendations. I do not know what this patent costs, but I will venture to say that what the Government has paid for the last two or three years for this patent-right in Philadelphia has been more than all the cloth which was there would have cost; and that is the way it is all over the country. We ought to investigate this case and we ought to stop that which we believe is wrong. The proviso was inserted in the other House on motion of a gentleman perfectly conversant with the subject. I have great faith in what he recommends, and besides I have considerable information myself on the subject.

Mr. THURMAN. If I understand the question before the Senate, it is whether the proviso on page 8 shall be stricken out. If I understood the Senator from Louisiana, he said that if that were stricken out it would be impossible for the Department to use any money to protect the clothing. He thought it was in virtue of this proviso that money could be paid for this purpose. If that was his idea, I submit to him that he was mistaken.

Mr. WEST. I contended that if that proviso remained in the bill, the Army could not use any kind of process whatever, however meritorious it might be, to preserve clothing. While I am up, if the Senator will allow me, I will refer to two bills of previous years in which we appropriated some $250,000 for a certain patent process, all of which is thrown out now.

Mr. THURMAN. I understand the committee propose to strike out this proviso, but I do not think that if it remained in it would prevent the Department from using the process; it would only prevent them from paying any royalty for the use of that process; that is, they might employ the person who used that process, but they could not pay a royalty. That I suppose to be the idea. If the committee want it stricken out, I have no objection to striking it out. I do not know that it will make much difference. I remember reading a very humorous speech on this subject, delivered by a member of the House of Representatives at the last session, in which it was said that some $200,000 had been wasted by the use of some process that was absolutely injurious to the cloth and did more harm than good. I do not know how that matter is.

Mr. LOGAN. I regard this as having a little more importance perhaps than some Senators seem to do. I think the House of Representatives in the proviso inserted here is right, and I think the amendment of the committee is certainly wrong, and I will give my reasons for this opinion.

Two years ago, I believe, or perhaps three years ago, the Senate and House of Representatives appropriated $200,000 in the Army appropriation bill to be used for the purpose of purchasing a patent process or paying the royalty on a patent process for some bug-destructive medicine. It passed here over the heads of some of us. Last year you appropriated in the Army appropriation bill I think $37,000 for the same purpose. I never could see the reason for it myself. Now the House provides that no part of this appropriation shall be paid for the use of any patent process for the preservation of cloth from moth or mildew. The meaning of that evidently is that no money shall be used for the purpose of paying a high price for that medicine by way of royalty on account of its being patented than would otherwise be charged; and that I think is clearly right, because if you will read the preceding part of this clause, it appropriates money—

For the purchase and manufacture of clothing and camp and garrison equipage, and for preserving and repacking the same.

There the House uses language that gives the Quartermaster-General authority to preserve the cloth by the use of any kind of preparation that is necessary, and the House only excludes the idea that he shall pay a royalty for a patent process that we have been paying nearly $300,000 for which I look upon as being—I will not say without any reason whatever—but I do say as being a very strange thing. I wish the clause to stand as it is in the House bill, because the language "for preserving and repacking" clothing gives the Quartermaster-General the right to use whatever material is necessary for the preservation of the cloth, subject to the restriction that no part of the money shall be paid for patent processes; that is, for royalty on any medicine. I think the House is clearly right. For that reason I am opposed to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The opinion of the committee was based upon this state of facts: that the appropriation, if it was made without the proviso, would leave the Quartermaster-General to exercise his discretion about the methods of preservation. It is not liable to the objection which my honorable friend from Illinois supposes that it is, an appropriation for the use of a certain patent. He might or might not use that; but if this proviso is stricken out, then it is left to the Quartermaster-General to exercise his discretion as to the best methods of preservation.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will remember that I have always persistently in the Senate opposed the Government paying for patent-rights. The Senator knows that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. I act upon a principle in that respect, so far as I am concerned. I am opposed to it because there is no reason or right or law in making the Government pay for the use of patents.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Supposing my honorable friend should find that the employment of a patented article, including the royalty upon it, was cheaper than any other article in the market and much more efficacious, would he wish to exclude the Government from the purchase of that?

Mr. LOGAN. The Government is not excluded from doing that by the House bill, in my judgment. It is only excluded from paying for a patent process. That is, as I understand the construction of the law, it would be excluded from paying for the royalty that is required from men who have a patent process, which I think is certainly correct.

There is another reason. I have known for many years of the preservation of clothing in the Army, but until this proposition was placed in the appropriation bills to pay for a patent process I never knew of any trouble whatever in preserving clothing in the Army any more than preserving it anywhere else. There never has been any trouble about the preservation of clothing in the Army any more than about the preservation of it in a store. My judgment about it is, and I did not want to say it before, that the proposition was gotten into the appropriation bills on recommendations probably from the Army without due consideration—that is as mild a term as I can use—that is, without due consideration from those recommending it belonging to the Army. I do not know that such was the case, but I am apprehensive that it was.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to occupy only one moment. I think the Senator from Illinois is mistaken when he construes the language in line 163 to authorize the use of any patent process. The language in that paragraph is precisely the language used last year in the appropriation bill.

Mr. LOGAN. For "preserving" clothing.

Mr. ALLISON. Then there was added to it an item of $30,000 for the preservation of clothing and equipage from moth and mildew. So that the language quoted by him does not authorize preservation, as I understand. Now, I think I understand the objection made by the Senator from Pennsylvania as well as the Senator from Illinois. They object, as I understand, to the use of a particular patent.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; I do not object to the use of a particular patent. I do not know what patent they use, but I object to the Government paying for any patent, I do not care what it is, whether medicine or anything else.

Mr. ALLISON. This proviso is that no part of this money shall be paid for the use of any patent process for the preservation of cloth from moth or mildew. That is to say, no patent process, however useful, shall be used by the officers of the Government unless it is used without compensation to the owner. Is not that the effect of this proviso? It seemed to the committee unjust to say that no invention, however useful, should be used by the Quartermaster-General for the purpose of preserving cloth. I care nothing about the proviso. If the Senate think that we ought to prohibit the use of patent processes for this purpose, very well, but I think we ought not to do it.

Mr. LOGAN. I think the Army got along well enough for a long time in preserving clothing without this patent process.

Mr. CAMERON. The Senator from Iowa is certainly not well informed on this subject or he would not take the ground he does. There is no process that ever has been heard of which will preserve anything from destruction; but latterly, some three years ago, somebody had address enough to make some of the officers of the Government believe that he could preserve cloth from being destroyed. We have paid already I think some $300,000.

Mr. LOGAN. About that sum of money.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no such appropriation in this bill.

Mr. CAMERON. No; but we have been appropriating for that purpose every year for three or four years past. It is wrong. It is a trick upon the Government. With it you cannot save anything from moths a bit more than a good housekeeper always knows how to protect her woollens and her furs. A little camphor and a little black pepper or something of that kind will save all the cloth and the furs of any household. These people got something together by which they made the officers of the Government think they could save a large amount of clothing which had purchased in the war beyond the amount required. They have been trying to preserve that thing which was decaying in the natural course. At all events, there can be no harm done by leaving the bill as the House of Representatives passed it in this respect.

Mr. WEST. There has been in use by the Army of the United States for several years past a certain patent process for preserving the clothing and the tents and the wagon-covers from moth and mildew. That has been found objectionable, and the House of Representatives has not on this occasion appropriated any money for that purpose here. It was $200,000 two years ago; $35,000 last year; and now the House of Representatives and the Committee on Appropriations in the House say "you shall not use that patent process any more." But some member in the House comes forward and says "not only you shall not use that process, but you shall not use any other process." So that if there is a patent process better than camphor or better than tobacco and the Army are using it, they are debarred from using it now, and this objectionable process carries down every other process with it.

The Senator from Pennsylvania talks about what a good housewife does. The amount of it is that if the Army are debarred from using any patent process—I do not know to what extent they want to use it; I do not know that they do want to use it—but if they are debarred from that, they are obliged to resort to the old preventive of camphor and tobacco, under the use of which we lost so largely from moth; and then there is nothing to make your tent-covers or your wagon-covers impregnable to water. So in striking at what may be considered an objectionable process, which is effectually struck at by striking out the appropriation for it which has hitherto been made, you propose to strike down every other process, no matter of how much use it might be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The little experience that I have had in law affairs leads me to believe that nine patents out of ten for chemical combinations or combinations of natural substances that produce a given result, as a pill or a compound, when they are brought to the test of judicial investigation, turn out to be utterly void. A patent is got through, and then somebody else uses something that the patentee says is an infringement, and he tries the case and gets beaten because it does not fall within the law of patents. For any man who discovers that spirits of turpentine and camphor put together will kill moths to say that nobody else shall put spirits of turpentine and camphor together to kill moths—of course I state a very broad case that is perfectly easy of answer—would not be allowable. So I do not think the United States will suffer any great danger or detriment if we say that the Quartermaster-General shall get on without paying royalties. The simple way, the old plan of getting at moths that every housewife in Washington and everywhere else where there are moths knows about, and which no man has a right to patent, whether he has patented it or not, will be sufficient to preserve these cloths.

There are a good many things necessary to make a valid patent to entitle a man to exclude other people from using his process; and if it has been in common use to use a particular set of things or any part of a combination of things to kill moths, the fact that a man goes to the Patent Office and goes through and gets a patent for that does not prevent other people from doing exactly as they did before. Therefore I do not think we run any great risk in saying to the Quartermaster-General of the Army, "You shall pay nothing for inventions for the coming year in taking care of your cloths. I do not think there is any risk about it at all."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the proviso.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator who has this bill in charge, whether he wishes amendments to be offered as the reading of the bill goes on or wishes them withheld until all the amendments the committee desire to offer shall have been acted upon?

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio, as we have but two or three more amendments, that we go on with the committee amendments first.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in line 209, to increase from $75,000 to $100,000 the appropriation "for manufacture of metallic ammunition for small-arms."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment was to insert at the end of line 214 the following clause:

For dismounting guns and removing the armaments from forts being repaired or modified, including carriages returned to arsenals for alterations and repairs, and overhauling and removing obsolete or surplus stores at permanent forts, and for repairing, preserving, overhauling, and painting the armaments in sea-coast forts, and for payment of labor and enlisted men detailed on extra duty, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 230, to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$200,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For manufacture, at national armories, of the new model breech-loading musket and carbine, adopted for the military service on recommendation of the board of officers convened under act of June 6, 1872, $200,000.

Mr. DAVIS. The amount now in the bill is $100,000 as it passed the House, and the same amount was appropriated last year. The committee recommend an increase to $200,000. It appears to me to be a very large amount now, and a very large increase—100 per cent. I think the increase ought not to be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say with reference to this amendment that although only $100,000 was appropriated last year, there was in fact used for this purpose in all nearly $500,000. The Department estimated for this year $300,000 and say they cannot get on well without at least an addition of $100,000 to the appropriation in the House bill. Each $100,000 will manufacture about fifty-five hundred stand of arms.

Mr. HAMLIN. Where did they get the additional $400,000 last year?

Mr. ALLISON. They received $100,000 from a standing appropriation, and the remainder was received from overlapping appropriations of sums due to the several States on account of the appropriation of 1868.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought we had cut off the overlapping of appropriations and got rid of that altogether.

Mr. ALLISON. There is an appropriation under the law of 1808 of $200,000 annually for the purpose of supplying the militia of the States with arms. At the beginning of each year that sum is credited to the several States.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a permanent appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a permanent appropriation and is already provided for by our law. They took from the several amounts credited to the States on account of this permanent appropriation the sum of about $300,000, which had accumulated from year to year, and that sum is now exhausted. So that if we appropriate the additional $100,000 asked for here we shall only have at the end of the next fiscal year about fifty-five hundred stand of the new arms. It is a question for the Senate to decide whether or not we shall have any accumulation of this new class of arms adopted by the board of officers in 1872. The committee thought it was important that we should have a surplus of at least seven or eight thousand stand of arms of this character; and hence they recommend the increase of $100,000, the Ordnance Department asking an appropriation of $300,000.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood the Senator who has charge of this bill to say that while the bill of last year appropriated $100,000 there was $500,000 spent for the purpose of manufacturing new arms. That is rather a strange proceeding, I should think. It is very singular that while $100,000 was appropriated by Congress, and the appropriation bills limit all appropriations to a specific purpose, there should have been $500,000 spent. I rather think the Senator must be mistaken, though he has information, I take it. We understand that probably $300,000 will do for this purpose this year. I cannot understand how money appropriated by law can be changed in its direction without authority of Congress; for instance, if the States are entitled to $200,000 worth of arms, that much belongs to the States, and ought not to be taken from them and appropriated here.

Mr. ALLISON. Of this $200,000 permanent appropriation the States may take the new arm or they may take an old arm in lieu. If they take the old, of course a sufficient amount of the new arms will be manufactured and placed in the armory to make up the value of the old arms distributed to the States. That is all there is of that. There is no taking of one appropriation for a purpose different from that intended. If any of the States require the new arm, of course the new arm is delivered to the State. I am told that in the case of New Jersey last year about one thousand stand of these new arms were delivered to the State of New Jersey because they required the new arm. There are some of the States which prefer to take the old Springfield musket because the cost is so much less and they can secure a much larger number, and when they do the amount to the credit of that State is used in the manufacture of the new arm and the new arm is placed in the arsenal. That is all there is of that. There is no diversion of any appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. The statute which authorizes a permanent appropriation for the arming of militia of the United States is found in the revised code and it is as follows:

The annual sum of $200,000 is appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of providing arms and equipments for the whole body of the militia, either by purchase or manufacture, by and on account of the United States.

The provision of law in relation to militia provides for the distribution of the arms, and it seems to me it would be an evasion of this law to expend $200,000 for the manufacture of good arms and then not distribute those arms among the States, the purpose of the law being to provide the militia with new arms and equipments from time to time to the extent of $200,000 a year. This permanent appropriation which is a part of the established policy of the Government it seems to me would be broken up, departed from, if you take the arms made for them under an appropriation for their benefit especially confined to the militia of the States and use them for the Army of the United States and give the militia old arms probably which are not good for anything.

Mr. ALLISON. These arms are distributed on the requisitions of the governors of the several States. The governor of a State might make a requisition for two thousand stand of old Springfield muskets, if you please, the cost of which is five dollars each, and they are delivered to that State, the cost of course being to the credit of the State. The Ordnance Department use that money in the remanufacture of this better class of arms. That is all there is in it.

Mr. SHERMAN. In other words the proper officers of the Department use the money that we appropriate for the militia of the States to make arms for the Army of the United States and use the old arms that belong to the Army of the United States for the benefit of the militia.

Mr. ALLISON. If they prefer it. In the case of New Jersey last year the State of New Jersey received one thousand stand of new arms, the very best arms made by the United States, costing eighteen dollars a piece. Why? Because they wanted the best arms. But the governor of the State of Ohio instead of wanting one thousand of these best arms, might want three thousand of the Springfield musket, a class of arms costing less money. Why should the Government of the United States direct that the governor of Ohio shall not take the class of arms that he desires for the arming of his militia?

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me it is very easy to answer that by saying the law does not authorize it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand the law to say that the United States shall distribute to the militia of the States any particular arm.

Mr. SHERMAN. The law provides that $200,000 shall be expended for the making of arms each year.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The law is that we shall provide the militia of the States with arms to the amount of $200,000 a year. We can make them or purchase them.

Mr. SHERMAN. This money can only be expended legally for the purpose of providing arms and equipments for the whole body of the militia.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is what they do.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now the idea of taking this $200,000 set apart as a fund to maintain the militia organization, to supply arms for the Army of the United States and give to the militia the old arms, does not comply with the law.

Mr. ALLISON. But there is an accumulation of arms always in the armories; and when the governor of a State makes a requisition they go to the armory and fill that requisition whether it be for the old Springfield musket or the improved breech-loading musket or the specially improved arm that is now in use in the Army of the United States. When the governor of Ohio asks for a thousand muskets, they cannot ask the governor to wait until they manufacture those muskets. They are delivered from those on hand when the requisition comes. It seems to me as plain as a pikestaff.

Mr. DAVIS. It occurs to me that if the $200,000 appropriated for the militia of the States were used for that purpose that would make with the $100,000 appropriated last year $300,000; and that ought to be sufficient now and ought not to be increased to $400,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 18, noes 20.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 33, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Bontwell, Cameron, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, and Windom—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, and Thurman—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Carpenter, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hitchcock, Jones, Lewis, Oglesby, Pease, Robertson, Schurz, Spencer, Stewart, Stockton, Tipton, and Wright—19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following amendment from the Committee on Appropriations. On line 34, after the word "marshals," to insert:

District attorneys and clerks of the courts.

So as to read:

Provided, That hereafter only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed to any person holding employment or appointment under the United States, except marshals, district attorneys, and clerks of the courts of the United States, and their deputies, &c.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not in favor of that amendment, and I had intended to move to strike out of line 34 the exception now there of "marshals of the United States and their deputies." The proviso limits the allowance for travel to all persons employed in the service of the Government to actual traveling expenses; but there is an exception made in the case of marshals and their deputies, and it is further proposed by the amendment to extend the exception to clerks of the courts and district attorneys. I can see no good reason for making this exception in favor of marshals and their deputies. You limit the Supervising Architect by the provisions of this bill and all public officers of the country to the actual traveling expenses incurred; and yet in the case of marshals you make an exception and grant them a greater allowance. I can see no reason for it. If there is any necessity for it I shall not oppose it, but I see none.

Mr. THURMAN. This subject was before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate on a bill that came from the House, and was there fully considered. The bill, as amended by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, was reported to the Senate and passed. The House disagreed to the amendment made by the Senate and asked for a committee of conference, and a committee of conference was appointed, and that committee agreed upon a report which was made, and I suppose has been accepted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has passed both Houses.

Mr. THURMAN. And is now the law. We endeavored to fix these fees at what seemed to be reasonable. There was considerable difference between the Senate and the House, but the House conferees in the end yielded substantially to what was done by the Senate. Now if this proviso be passed just as it is, it in effect repeals the bill which we have lately passed. There were such representations made to us of hardship that would result to some of the officers if the law stood as it is contained in this proviso, and also as to difficulties in settling accounts at the Treasury, that we thought it necessary to legislate upon the subject. This proviso is precisely the same proviso that was in the Army appropriation bill last year and which necessitated the legislation which has already passed the Senate. Now the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa is to make this proviso conform to the law which has already passed at this session. Under these circumstances I think my friend from Delaware will see that it is best not to oppose the amendment.

Mr. MORTON. It strikes me that this whole proviso is very sweeping. It applies to civil as well as military officers. It is a very sweeping and general provision to go into a military appropriation bill, and very much of it has no business in this bill clearly. We cannot tell what we are voting upon when we vote for this proviso, even with this exception that it is proposed to make. It occurs to me that the whole proviso is very dangerous.

Mr. THURMAN. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that, as I understand, the law before we passed the bill this year was precisely the same with this proviso; and although that was contained in a proviso to an appropriation bill, yet it was in its nature permanent legislation. It was a permanent law, and there really was no necessity whatever for repeating it this year in this appropriation bill. I think I am right in that. But whether that is so or not, this proviso as it now stands is in direct conflict with a bill that has passed both Houses at the present session, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa is simply to make it conform to the bill which we have passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that this proviso was put upon the Army bill last year just as it has been upon this bill, except that it only applied to the appropriation of last year. Now this proviso has inserted in the thirty-second line the word "hereafter," so that it becomes now under this bill a permanent law with reference to the question of traveling expenses and applies of course to all the Departments of the Government, civil and military.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the Senator from Ohio how he understands that the law will stand on this subject? I understand him to say that this proviso repeals this act which has just become a law.

Mr. THURMAN. It would repeal it if it were not amended.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then that being repealed the provision of the act of last year having no force except for that year, what would be the state of the law on the subject of marshals, clerks of courts, and district attorneys?

Mr. THURMAN. The proviso in the appropriation bill of last year in my judgment was a permanent law. I do not think it requires any word "hereafter" to make it a permanent law. But assuming that it was not, if this proviso should pass just as it is, it would repeal by implication the law which we have already passed at this session and this proviso in hac verba would be the law.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That was my understanding of it; and the effect would be to restore this class of officers to the law of 1853 fixing their fees. This class of officers would then be remitted to the act of 1853.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As modified by the legislation of this session.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. As modified by the legislation of this session; by this proviso, does the Senator mean?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; by the independent act that we have passed touching this subject.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But the Senator from Ohio is of opinion that this will supersede that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So it will if we pass it into the law, but with this amendment it remits the marshals, district attorneys, and clerks to the act of 1853, the fee-bill for judicial officers, as modified and construed by the act we have already passed at this session.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But that act being repealed by this proviso, provided it goes into effect, then it is not modified in any sense.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it is repealed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The motion simply is not to strike out this proviso but to amend it; to extend its operation to other classes of officers. I want to know what the effect of it will be if this proviso passes, whether we shall remit these classes of officers to the operation of the law of 1853 which allows constructive travel.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If this proviso passes as it stands in the printed bill as it came from the House of Representatives, then we shall not remit these classes of officers, marshals, &c., to the act of 1853, but we shall take them out of it, as the military bill of last year did also, and we shall provide that the fee-bill of 1853, providing for judicial officers, will not act upon them at all, and yet a large part of their fees intentionally was to be obtained by travel and expenses that they did and incurred in the execution of writs and processes and in going to and from courts. It was thought that the act of last year was not intended to touch the judicial officers of the United States, because they were not paid a salary. Marshals are not paid a salary; clerks are not; district attorneys are not, except in a mere nominal sense of $200; but military officers have their pay under the Army laws. They are employed in the service of the United States all the time, and for nothing else. In respect of them the House of Representatives last year, and the Senate agreed to it, provided that when they traveled under necessary and proper lawful orders they should only be paid for their travel their actual and necessary expenses. That was right, because their compensation the law had provided for amply before. When you come to marshals, district attorneys, and clerks of the courts, a part of their compensation by the scheme of the law from the foundation of the Government to this time has been the fees and allowances that they were to get for doing particular duties. Among those are the duties of the marshals to travel to serve process. They are allowed certain sums per mile. If a district attorney has to go fifty miles to attend before a commissioner of the United States at the hearing of a man brought up for a crime, he is allowed a certain number of cents per mile for doing that service. So with clerks when they have to travel from the place of their abode to the place of holding court, and so on.

The accounting officers of the Treasury hold that this language in the military bill of last year was so broad that it covered these judicial personages whom I have named. The effect of it was to destroy in substance the largest part of the compensation which these persons received for performing public duties. In view of that circumstance both Houses have passed at this session an act which declares that last year's law in these same words as they stand in the print here should not be construed to apply to this class of officers, as it ought not to have been considered to apply to them, and declares that they shall stand upon the act of 1853—that was the substance of it—with an addition which the Committee of this body on the Judiciary recommended and which was agreed to by both Houses, that no allowance for constructive travel shall be made, but that we shall only pay for the travel they actually perform under the provisions of the act of 1853. Now, then, in order to leave the law as we have adjusted it at this session, it is necessary, if this proviso is to stand at all, that this exception should be made in respect to marshals, district attorneys, and clerks.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But then if this act goes into effect it will not leave it as the bill which has passed as an independent law provides.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, it will, if you put in this exception.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator will excuse me, I think not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Because this bill repeals your act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is a proviso in this present bill which as it stands in the print, excepting the words "except marshals of the United States and their deputies," stands exactly as the law did last year, which was found to operate unjustly and beyond the scope that was supposed to have been intended. The House, having that idea in view, in this proviso in respect of actual traveling expenses as distinguished from mileage have excepted from the operation of the proviso, marshals. So far as marshals go, that is all right. That would leave the law in perfect harmony with the way it now stands by the act of this session, because this proviso which limits travel, &c., to actual expenses, excepts marshals from its operation. We only propose now to add to marshals the other judicial officers, district attorneys, and clerks. The proviso then will read: "That hereafter only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed," &c., to people traveling under the authority of the United States, "except marshals, district attorneys, and clerks of the courts of the United States;" so that the proviso does not operate upon that class of persons, and, so far as I now understand it, it would leave them just where the act of 1853 and the act of this year leave them.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Being the same class of officers that are excepted in the act which has passed as an independent bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Being the same class of people provided for, not excepted, because that is an independent bill; and leaving them out of the operation of this proviso of course leaves them to stand on the law as it is now. The law as it is now gives them the payment that the act of 1853 allows to them, limited to actual travel instead of constructive travel.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will ask the Senator whether if this proviso is stricken out entirely he understands that the whole question of travel is then provided for?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not provided for as it respects military officers or anybody else excepting the judicial officers of the United States; that is to say, marshals, district attorneys, and clerks.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is to say, it will not be provided for if the proviso of 1874 was simply operative upon that bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; if it was only operative on that bill, the thing is at sea again. If that is a continuous provision in the act of last year, it would still operate on military officers.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Vermont has stated, I think with sufficient fullness, the facts about this matter; but as I have been somewhat taken to task by the courts and officers of the courts for a supposed oversight of mine in this regard, I wish to say a word on the history of it.

When the act of last year to which reference is made was pending in the Senate, the Senator from Wisconsin not now in his seat [Mr. CARPENTER] and I made earnest but futile endeavor to attract the attention of the Senate and of the committee having charge of the bill to the fact that the words, as then proposed and enacted, would have exactly the effect which since they have had; and I do not understand why the Senator from Vermont says they ought not to have been construed to include these officers. Certainly it would not lie in my mouth to say that, as I insisted at the time that they did include these officers as the Senator from Wisconsin, much higher authority than I am, also declared at the time that they did include these officers, and we came to that conclusion after an examination with some care.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me, I will state to him why I said that. I was not in the Senate when this event occurred, and I only looked to the statute, having no knowledge of what took place in the Senate, and reading the statute I had the impression that it ought not to have been construed to include any other than the people provided for by the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator may have read it more advisedly than we did, but it was the opinion of the Senator from Wisconsin, and it was mine also although that did not add weight to his, that the words would include marshals and district attorneys. The effect was to leave these men substantially without compensation; and so true was that, that deputies refused and I think were justified in refusing to go for nothing to serve process running wherever anybody might choose to send process. That was the attitude in which we found ourselves at the beginning of this session. To cure that, the bill referred to by the Senator from Vermont was enacted into law in both Houses, and it excepted from the operation of this proviso these three classes of officers. Now, the amendment pending proposes to harmonize this provision with that independent act so that the proviso will still operate as it was intended to operate and will reach all persons except these three classes now provided for by the exemption; and when that exemption is incorporated in the bill, then this bill having become a law will be harmonized with the other bill which has already become a law.

It seems to me that it is too manifest upon its merits, too plain in its effects, to permit Senators to doubt either what it means or the propriety of the amendment proposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. I offer an amendment to insert at the end of the one hundred and sixty-sixth line the following:

Provided further, That the expenditures on account of regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, cavalry and artillery horses, Army transportation, and clothing and equipage may be made under one general head: And provided further, That should the expenditure be made in this manner the gross amount appropriated for the Quartermaster's Department shall be reduced in gross amount $500,000.

There is a proposition to reduce the expenditures under this bill a half million dollars, and in making it I will state that it has come into my hands from the Quartermaster's Department since this bill was considered in the committee, and I offer it with a view of saving that much money. I hope it will prevail.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like some explanation of what is meant by "under one head."

Mr. WEST. I will explain. There are six heads in the bill, six heads in the amendment; regular supplies, $6,734,000; incidental expenses, $1,200,000; horses, &c., $300,000; quarters, &c., $1,500,000; transportation, $4,000,000; clothing, $450,000; amounting to $12,700,000. Here is a proposition that if these accounts can be kept under one head, 4 per cent. less money will run them. I can only understand it thus. I do not want to take exception to a proposition that is made from a Department that proposes to save half a million. I think the reasoning is this: that by keeping the accounts under these separate heads certain balances are required to lie in the hands of quartermasters; that is to say, they must have so much money on account of horses, and so much money on account of quarters, and so on; and by keeping them all under one head, if it becomes necessary—it is only a provision that they may do it—they can reduce the surplus balances lying in the hands of the quartermasters. At all events all that thing can be understood as between the two Houses in time. There being here a proposition to save $500,000, I thought it judicious to offer it, and I think the Senate will find it judicious to accept it.

Mr. THURMAN. That is strange arithmetic to me. I can see one effect of the amendment at once, and that is to make all the appropriations contained in this bill for the Quartermaster's Department, amounting to somewhere about $12,000,000, one gross sum; and instead of going around about the bush, the Senator had better move to strike out all the items and simply say "for the Quartermaster's Department, $12,000,000," and then leave it to the Quartermaster-General to expend it as he sees fit; for that is precisely what will be the effect of this amendment if it should be adopted.

But, Mr. President, if half a million can be saved in that way, then it is our business to cut down the appropriation and save that half million. I do not think half a million can be saved by book-keeping. Because a sum is appropriated here for one purpose or another purpose, it does not follow that the Quartermaster-General is bound to expend the whole of that sum. On the contrary, he is bound to expend no more of it than is necessary. He is bound to leave the rest of it in the Treasury of the United States, or, if it should be drawn out to have it covered back into the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year as an unexpended balance. But how it can be that by putting the whole $12,000,000 at the discretion of the Quartermaster-General to expend it for any purpose to which he sees fit to apply it, half a million can be saved, is a little past my comprehension.

I have had occasion before to object to this wholesale mode of making appropriations. I believe it is contrary to the spirit, if not to the very letter of the Constitution which provides that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury except in accordance with appropriations made by law. I have seen $18,000,000 appropriated in a naval appropriation bill for purposes covering four or five pages of that bill without one word to show how much was to be applied to one purpose and how much to another. I remember one naval appropriation bill in which the specific appropriations were less than three-quarters of a million and $18,000,000 were then appropriated in such wise that it would have been precisely the same as if the bill had read in these few words, "for the Navy Department $18,000,000," and that is precisely what is proposed here, "for the Quartermaster's Department, $12,000,000."

I hope that this amendment will not prevail. It puts the whole appropriation in the discretion of that officer to use as much of it for one purpose as he shall see fit, as much for another purpose as he shall see fit, and none at all for the other purposes that are named in the bill.

Mr. WEST. That is very much so. It is very much as the Senator says, but if at the same time by lumping your appropriations you can save money, does the Senator insist on specifying them?

Mr. THURMAN. Why does not the Senator say "for the War Department and the support of the Army $27,000,000"—that is his bill—and leave it to the Secretary of War? Is that the way we are to appropriate money? I take it not.

Mr. WEST. I am for appropriating money so that we can get along with the least amount, and I believe to-day that the best way to make an appropriation for the support either of the Army or the Navy would be to make it in lump and then hold them to a strict criticism of the manner in which they spend it. Having had it suggested to me that this manner of appropriation would save that much money and the suggestion coming from the Department, I have offered the proposition. I do not ask the Senator to vote for it. Here is a proposition to save half a million. If it is not desirable, do not vote for it.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to criticize the Department's judgment, but I do say that to appropriate money in that way and talk about saving—no, I will not use the language I was going to use, but "that won't do at all." You never would know how the money was expended; you would never know anything about it, and there would be no possibility of ascertaining how it was expended, and there never would be any unexpended balance of the $12,000,000, or if there was any it would be very small. [Laughter.] I think the proposition that this will reduce expenses looks very well on its face to enable a man to say he votes for a reduction, but it is no reduction. It means putting books in such a shape that we cannot tell anything about them.

Mr. WEST. Does not every voucher of the Army of the United States have to pass the Auditor and Comptroller?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, every one does; and did you ever hear of one that did not pass?

Mr. WEST. Plenty.

Mr. LOGAN. Very few. I recollect one that did not. I remember once in one of the Auditors' offices a quartermaster had his account suspended for seven months because he could not account for three balls of candle-wick, and that is the only instance I know of. [Laughter.]

I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer an amendment which has already passed the House and been favorably acted on by the Military Committee and is recommended by the Department. It involves no money. It is to add as a separate section to the bill:

Sec. — That all issues of arms and other ordnance stores which were made by the War Department to the States and Territories between the 1st day of January, 1861, and the 9th day of April, 1865, under the act of April 23, 1863, and charged to the States and Territories, having been made for the maintenance and preservation of the Union, and properly chargeable to the United States, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, upon a proper showing by such States of the faithful disposition of said arms and ordnance stores, to credit the several States and Territories with the sum charged to them respectively for arms and other ordnance stores which were issued to them between the aforementioned dates, and charged against their quotas under the law for arming and equipping the militia: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, before making a credit to any of said States and Territories, to investigate and ascertain so nearly as he can the disposition made by each of said States and Territories of said arms and ordnance stores; and, if he shall find that any of said arms or ordnance stores have been sold or otherwise misapplied, to refuse a credit to such State or Territory for so much of said arms and ordnance stores as have been sold or misapplied; and the amount thereof shall remain a charge against said State or Territory, the same as if this act had not been passed.

I think a few words will explain this amendment, and if I do not give the exact facts my friend from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] will correct me. During the recent war large quantities of arms and ordnance stores were issued mainly to the Western States, and in the hurry and first confusion of the alarm of the war they were charged to what is called the militia fund, the fund of $200,000 appropriated annually under a permanent law. The result was that many of the States had charged to them several times the amount of their share of arms and ordnance stores. All these arms were really used in the service of the United States and were the arms with which the first volunteers especially entered the service of the United States, and were not properly chargeable to what is called the militia fund. The Chief of Ordnance has called attention to the settlement of these accounts for several years, and I will read a short extract from a report of General Dyer in which he refers to this matter:

Large sums of money were charged against some of the States for arms, &c., furnished by this Department during the war, and other States, equally populous, had no charges made against them during the same period; and it seems to me highly probable that errors occurred in keeping the account with the States which do great injustice to some of them, but which this Bureau has no authority to correct. The principal, if not all, of the issues which were made to the States during the war, were made to them for the maintenance of the Government and the preservation of the Union, and should have been charged, as arms and other stores issued to volunteers, to the United States, and not to the States. If the errors can be corrected they should be. In my opinion it would be fairer and juster to the States to credit them with all issues made to them during the war, and charged on their quotas for arming and equipping the militia, than to let the accounts stand as they now are on the books of this office. Some of the States are now charged with a greater sum than their annual quotas will amount to in half a century, and under a proper decision of the War Department no issues can be made to States which are charged with arms and other stores in excess of their quotas. I respectfully suggest that it may be proper to invite legislation on this subject.

My attention is called to this matter by a letter from the executive authority of the State of Ohio, by which it appears that Ohio in this way is erroneously charged with arms and ordnance stores which it will take her over ten years to exhaust, and every one of these guns and all the ordnance stores were consumed in the service of the United States. The State of Nebraska is charged with arms and ordnance that it would take her fifty years to exhaust. The States of Indiana and Illinois, and other States which responded quickly and hurriedly to the call made for troops in the earlier periods of war, were armed with these guns, which were furnished to them from the militia fund. This has been overlooked. This measure stands before us as a bill passed by the House of Representatives, recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, and recommended by the Department. There can be no doubt that these accounts ought to be restated.

Mr. MORTON. This is a very plain question. The arms were issued at the beginning of the war and a number of States were charged on the books of the Government as if they were sent to the State for the militia, when in truth they were sent and placed in the hands of volunteers who went into the service of the United States and not into the hands of the militia. Of course, it is unjust to those States and we want the account restated. That is all.

Mr. WEST. I ask the opinion of the Senator from Ohio whether it increases the appropriation?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not a dollar. It is only a question of accounts with the several States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARVEY. I offer an amendment to the bill on page 4, line 67; after the word "dollars" I propose to insert:

Provided, That of this amount a sum not to exceed $50,000 may be expended before the beginning of the year for the purchase of such supplies as it may be found to the advantage of the Government to purchase immediately.

This is the clause to which I offer the proviso:

For regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, to wit: For the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, consisting of stoves for heating and cooking; of fuel for officers, enlisted men, guards, hospitals, store-houses, and offices; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department, at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field; for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bedding; and of stationery, including blank books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's Departments, and for printing of division and department orders and reports, $4,250,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that there is any special objection to that amendment. Perhaps the phraseology might be changed. A similar amendment is to be found on page 3 as applied to the Subsistence Department. But I do not know that the Quartermaster-General or any officer of the Quartermaster-General's Department has suggested this amendment. It seems to me if they wanted it they would have made their wish known to the committee.

Mr. HARVEY. I will state that I consulted the acting quartermaster and the Secretary of War and they both approve this amendment.

Mr. COOPER. Let the amendment be reported.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. Has the Senator from Kansas who offered this amendment explained its object?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas has made a statement of the case.

Mr. HARVEY. I will state that this amendment comes in at the conclusion of the paragraph which provides for the purchase of regular supplies for the Quartermaster's Department. It is as the Senator from Iowa states similar to the one at the conclusion of the paragraph making appropriations to be applied by the Commissary-General of Subsistence, except that this amendment provides for a much less sum. The object of my amendment I will state.

In large portions of the western country, in different States and Territories, supplies such as fuel, wood, &c., can be purchased at much more favorable rates now than they can be next summer or at any time in the future, and this would furnish employment to people who are now without work and who want to furnish the fuel from their farms. I hope there will be no objection to the amendment. I have consulted the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster-General, and they are in favor of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. In line 141, before the words "provided further," I move to insert:

And when the right shall be so determined in the case of any company, no suit or proceedings shall be necessary afterward to entitle any company in like cases to receive such compensation.

This has reference to land-grant roads; and the principle having been settled, it is to prevent other companies being involved in the expense of litigation. I presume there will be no objection to it.

Mr. THURMAN. Let the Clerk report the amendment.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that mean?

Mr. RAMSEY. It means, if the principle has once been determined, that other companies situated as that company which has been in litigation, there is no occasion to drive it into litigation at great expense. That is all.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask the attention of the Senate to these provisos in this bill, for they look to me very much like encouraging suits against the United States and no small amount of litigation. The first proviso to the section begins on page 6, and is in these words:

Provided, That no money shall hereafter be paid to any railroad company for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States over any railroad which in whole or in part was constructed by the aid of a grant of public land on the condition that such railroad should be—

Now comes the quotation—

"a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge"

There the quotation ends—or upon any other conditions for the use of such road for such transportation; nor shall any allowance be made for the transportation of officers of the Army over any such road when on duty and under orders as military officers of the United States.

So far this provision was contained substantially in the Army bill of last year but restricted to the appropriations made by that bill. This was also in the Army bill last year:

But nothing herein contained shall be construed as preventing any such railroad from bringing a suit in the Court of Claims for the charges for such transportation, and recovering for the same if found entitled thereto by virtue of the laws in force prior to the passage of this act.

So far this was substantially, as I have said, in the Army bill last year, but restricted to the appropriations in that bill and not as now proposed as a part of the permanent law of the land. Then follows what was not in the Army bill last year:

Provided further, That the foregoing restriction shall not apply, for the current and next fiscal years, to roads where the sole condition of transportation is that the company shall not charge the Government higher rates than they do individuals for like transportation, and when the Quartermaster-General shall be satisfied that this condition has been faithfully complied with: And provided further, That hereafter, when troops or officers change stations, their families shall receive transportation over land-grant and subsidized railroads which receive no payments from the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. That last proviso has been stricken out.

Mr. THURMAN. Very well. I did not notice that; but it is immaterial. Now let us see what these provisos are: First, that there shall be no payment hereafter for transportation of property or troops of the United States, or any military officer of the United States, when on duty and under military orders, over any railroad to which a grant of public land has been made on condition that the railroad shall be "a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from toll or other charge, or upon any other conditions for the use of such road, for such transportation." Let us apply that to the existing legislation on the subject. By the act of 1862 incorporating the Pacific Railroads, the Union Pacific, Central Pacific, and the branches, it is provided—

That the grants aforesaid are made upon condition that said company shall pay said bonds at maturity, and shall keep said railroad and telegraph line in repair and use, and shall at all times transmit dispatches over said telegraph line, and transport mails, troops, and munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon said railroad for the Government, whenever required to do so by any Department thereof, and that the Government shall at all times have the preference in the use of the same for all the purposes aforesaid, (at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amounts paid by private parties for the same kind of service;) and all compensation for services rendered for the Government shall be applied to the payment of said bonds and interest until the whole amount is fully paid.

I suppose the object of this second proviso is to except those railroads from the operation of what is previously contained in the section. As the law stood in last year's bill, it plainly embraced the Pacific railroads, the Union, the Central, the Kansas Pacific, the Sioux City branch, and all of them. This second proviso says:

That the foregoing restriction shall not apply for the current fiscal year nor thereafter—

Why should you say "for the current fiscal year nor thereafter," instead of saying "shall not apply at all"—

to roads where the sole condition of transportation is that the company shall not charge the Government higher rates than they do individuals for like transportation, and when the Quartermaster-General shall be satisfied that this condition has been faithfully complied with.

I can conceive of no other reason for this second proviso than to take the Pacific railroads out of the operation of this first proviso. Very well. Then I would like to know from the Senator who has this bill in charge what railroads are left for the first proviso to operate upon. After he has thus taken out the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, the Kansas branch, the Sioux City, and all the branches of Pacific railroads, I want to know what roads are left for this first proviso to operate upon. If there are none left, then there is no necessity for the first proviso. If there are others left, then I ask the Senator to explain why it is that there should be a discrimination between one set of railroads and another, such as is made.

But that is not all. Here is a provision that no transportation shall be paid where the condition is that such railroad shall be "a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge." When the amendment of the Northern Pacific Railroad charter was under consideration in 1870, when that company asked a large additional grant to be made to them and additional facilities to be conferred upon them, I moved in the Senate, as one of the conditions upon which additional privileges and additional grants should be made, that the company should forever carry the troops and munitions of war of the United States free of charge. It was answered that there was already a provision in the charter that the road should be "a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge." But there is such a provision in regard to other railroads, and what construction has been put upon it? Not the construction that the company is bound at its expense to carry the troops and munitions of war, but simply that the Government in a case of necessity may take the road and use its own cars; that is, the Government may procure cars and run them over the road and pay nothing for the use of the road.

Mr. BAYARD. As a highway.

Mr. THURMAN. Use it as a highway. That is then a provision that really is worth scarcely anything at all. If that is the true interpretation, which I do not say it is by any manner of means, then this provision is of no use whatsoever or this provision is wrong, one or the other. It must be so. If the real, the true interpretation of the provision is that the company is not bound, in its own cars and at its own expense, to transport troops and munitions of war, but that our right is simply to put our own cars on the road and transport over it without any charge to the road our troops and munitions of war, then we have no right to impose upon such a company the burden of carrying our troops and munitions of war without charge.

I see my five minutes are out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. RAMSEY.]

Mr. CONKLING. I would like to hear the amendment reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert before the words "provided further" in line 141 of the bill as printed with the amendments, the following:

And when the right shall be so determined in case of any company no suit or proceeding shall be necessary thereafter to entitle any company in like cases to receive such compensation.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator that the word "there" does not belong; "shall be necessary afterward."

Mr. President, this amendment, as I think, does express a purpose, except that the word "there" preceding "afterward" is a mistake no doubt. With that word stricken out it seems to me that the purpose of the amendment is clearly declared; and if I understand that purpose aright, I shall vote for it and I would be glad to know from any Senator who disapproves the amendment whether I am right in the understanding which I will state. The provision as it now stands commits to the Court of Claims the persons upon whom it operates to get from that court a judgment which shall amount to a certificate that they are entitled to the measure of compensation that they are to receive. It will first of all occur to everybody that that is a very good provision for lawyers. That it is going to breed a large crop of legal proceedings is pretty clear; but it would be very aggravating if when a party in interest has gone to the Court of Claims and obtained an adjudication, he must keep going every six months or every year to the Court of Claims to have this adjudicated and adjudicated again. It would be almost equally hard, there being two parties similarly situated, or three, one of which goes to the Court of Claims and gets every principle and every ingredient in the case adjudicated, if the others also were compelled to duplicate that proceeding and go one after another into the court and get the same adjudication.

Mr. THURMAN. My friend will allow me a question?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. The proposition is, if a decision is made in favor of the company that shall bind the Government in respect to all other companies in like condition, I understand. But now suppose the decision, instead of being against the Government is in favor of the Government; is the Senator willing that all other companies shall be bound by that decision too?

Mr. CONKLING. I shall have no objection to that. I see no objection to that; but this amendment has no relation to that, I suggest to the Senator. The adjudication in that regard, with or without this amendment, would be the same. The effect of this amendment is merely to say that if one corporation, with or without agreement, shall contribute to the expenses and that their load of expenses shall abide the result of suit, if one company goes forward and incurs the expense and trouble of getting the Court of Claims to adjudicate in a given case, that adjudication shall apply as well in other like cases as in the case in which technically it was rendered. Without such a provision a judgment binds no one except parties and privies. Here stand in a line three or four other persons having precisely the same right ordinarily of proceeding in court. One would stipulate that the other cases should abide the event and one pioneer case would be tried to settle the right of all. I understand the purpose of this amendment to be substantially that, that one party in interest obtaining an adjudication that in a like case shall be the rule of law and the rule of action between the Government and the parties. If the amendment means that, I see no objection to it. If it means anything more than that, it can be modified.

Mr. MORTON. I ask the Senator whether it would not be the duty of the Government, where a case was settled, to apply the rule adopted in the Court of Claims to the other companies independent of this provision, if it was shown to the Department that it was precisely similar; and if it was not precisely similar, if the Department would not be convinced of it, then the adoption of this amendment would not make any difference anyhow.

Mr. CONKLING. I am inclined to think the question of the Senator from Indiana is well founded, and yet the Senator will see it would be loading upon an administrative officer rather an unfair responsibility without anything burdening him to work by a line laid down by the court in a particular case, to expect him to do it. He might very well say, "Why, technically this means that all those who are to receive anything must come here with a certificate from the Court of Claims; I shall not move; I am not called upon to investigate this thing. When they come with a certified record from the Court of Claims, I will act upon that. The law summoned me to obey no other behest, and I await for that." The adoption of this amendment would have precisely the effect, as I understand it, which the Senator from Indiana ascribes, in moral effect and intentment, to the section without it, namely, to advise the administrative or executive officer that when he finds a case in which A has obtained a judgment in the Court of Claims and B has just such a case, without putting B to the expense of going to the Court of Claims he is to govern himself accordingly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That leaves it to the discretion of the Department.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all.

Mr. SCOTT. I have looked at this amendment, and I think it requires a further modification before it can be adopted. The present provision authorizes companies to go into the Court of Claims for the purpose of having their right to compensation determined. The amendment proposes to add the following:

And when the right shall be so determined in the case of any company, no suit or proceeding shall be necessary afterward to entitle any company in like cases to receive such compensation.

Mr. CONKLING. "In like case."

Mr. SCOTT. "In like case." Now, under that provision an adjudication in the Court of Claims will be conclusive upon the executive officers. If either party should be dissatisfied and take the case to the Supreme Court, as they may, they would be going on making settlements upon the basis of the adjudication in the Court of Claims when that ruling may be reversed. This amendment should be so far modified as not to require this to be applied until there shall be a final determination in the court of last resort.

Mr. CONKLING. That is the word I would suggest, "finally" before "determined."

Mr. SCOTT. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his modification.

Mr. SCOTT. Before the word "determined" insert "finally," and after "determined" the words "in the court of last resort;" so as to read:

Shall be so finally determined in the court of last resort in the case of any company, &c.

Mr. STEWART. I do not believe anybody knows what this proviso means. I do not believe anybody ever can tell what it means. I do not know what it means.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senator is not speaking of my amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I am speaking of the whole section. I do not know what any of these provisos mean with regard to the Central Pacific, the Union Pacific, and the branches of the Pacific road. The Judiciary Committee prepared an amendment which was adopted by the Senate in regard to this matter last year. If there is further legislation necessary on that subject, the Committee on the Judiciary ought to examine it. We ought not to jump in the dark and interfere with vested rights or do anything not examined by that committee in regard to the construction of law. But this language, I think, is so thoroughly ambiguous that it will simply be a trap for somebody. The first proviso reads:

That no money shall hereafter be paid to any railroad company for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States over any railroad which, in whole or in part, was constructed by the aid of a grant of public land on the condition that such railroad should be "a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge."

If that clause in the charter makes it obligatory upon the companies to carry the Government troops free, if that be the construction of it, then this provision ought to go to the Judiciary Committee in order to be inquired into. If it goes to that extent, that part of it would be all very well; but the charters ought to be examined to see if that be the case, and the thing ought to be prohibited. Then the next clause here is certainly a most ambiguous thing to put into a law:

Constructed by the aid of a grant of public land, on the condition that such railroad should be "a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge" or upon any other conditions for the use of such road for such transportation.

Suppose the other condition should be that they should pay so much or should not pay higher than a certain rate. This proviso says they shall not pay at all. The very condition in the charter may be a certain rate of payment. Then this will be clearly a violation of good faith. Suppose there should be a land grant (I do not know of any) upon the condition that the Government shall have the use of the road for one-fourth what the public pays. Now this amendment would say, "You cannot pay that one-fourth." It is loosely drawn, and you do not know what it does mean. I say this kind of legislation, without being examined by the Judiciary Committee, is dangerous. I do not know what roads it applies to. I do not know what it is meant for. That is the reason I am opposed to it. I think at all events this ought to be stricken out or go to the committee to have somebody examine it and see what it does mean. There are some lawyers on that committee no doubt who will know what it does mean.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator it is the law now, as he will see if he examines the statutes.

Mr. STEWART. So much the worse. Why repeat it?

Mr. THURMAN. It is in last year's appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The exact language is in last year's appropriation bill. It is operating now.

Mr. STEWART. Is the clause of the first proviso, "or upon any other conditions for the use of such road for such transportation," in the act of last year?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEWART. That shows that it ought to have gone to the Judiciary Committee. I do not believe the Committee on the Judiciary would have recommended it.

Mr. ALLISON. I thought the Senator said the Judiciary Committee recommended it?

Mr. STEWART. Not this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. STEWART. I had not got to the most absurd part of this thing.

Mr. ALCORN. If I have an opportunity, I will vote to strike out this proviso for the reason that there is no condition, as I understand the recitation here, in the acts granting land which requires the railroads to transport the troops of the Government of the United States. If there be in any of the grants of land a condition that the railroad company shall transport the troops of the United States over the road when built free of charge, I will observe that condition and am ready to enforce it. But here is a provision—

That no money shall hereafter be paid to any railroad company for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States over any railroad which, in whole or in part, was constructed by the aid of a grant of public land on the condition that such railroad should be—

What?

should be "a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge."

I am willing to assert the right of the Government in such cases to the use of a road, to assert that it is a public highway, that it is subject to the use of the Government as a public highway, and that over it it can transport its troops and its property free from charge; but I am not willing here to say that the railroad shall do what it has not undertaken to do, what its charter does not bind it to do; and no court under heaven will ever decide that railroads are required to comply with a condition that they have not undertaken to perform in their charter without compensation. There is a railroad. It is a public highway. The Government of the United States can take it and use its own rolling-stock if it sees proper to put it upon it, and can transport its troops and property over that road; but what you say here the road shall do is something the railroad has not undertaken to do or perform. Congress cannot require that that railroad shall do and perform that which they have not undertaken to do and have not by implication bound themselves to do.

I take the bill as I see it on its face. I know very little about railroads; but I know the law of the case, if I know anything, is not sufficient to bind the roads to the contract and to the conditions that you here undertake to require them to perform. I state that as a legal proposition.

Mr. WRIGHT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. RAMSEY. As modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification is accepted.

Mr. WRIGHT. Which is to add the language proposed by the Senator from Minnesota between the word "act" and "provided" in line 141. The language immediately preceding is—

But nothing herein contained shall be construed as preventing any such railroad from bringing a suit in the Court of Claims for the charges for such transportation, and recovering for the same if found entitled thereto by virtue of the laws in force prior to the passage of this act.

Then comes the proviso, in substance that where an action has been brought in the Court of Claims and an adjudication had thereon, as it is now modified, a final adjudication in the court of last resort, it shall not be necessary for another railroad in like cases to bring actions, but they can recover in virtue of or by force of the adjudication in the other cases. In other words, I understand the principle contained in this amendment is that the adjudication in the one case shall be conclusive as against the Government in all other like cases. It seems to me that that is certainly the most extraordinary doctrine in a statute. Whatever may be the circumstances under which the first suit is brought and adjudicated, whether the Government be fully prepared for such adjudication or not, whether it was well attended to or not, whatever may be the circumstances under which the judgment was rendered, whether the testimony was prepared well or not, or whether it was well presented or not, then the Government is to be concluded in all like cases as to other companies in their situations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And leave it to an executive officer to determine.

Mr. WRIGHT. And to leave it to an executive officer, as the Senator from Vermont suggests, to determine whether they are like cases or not. This officer determines that it is a like case and makes the allowance; and where is the security of the Government as to that determination? I think you have never found any such rule as this applied in the courts of the country. Why do you incorporate into an appropriation bill a doctrine which it seems to me is most extraordinary? No man can tell where he can have this determined so far as these allowances are concerned. Where there may be but $500 or $1,000 involved without reparation on the part of the Government, an executive officer determines that it is a like case, and there comes up, not $1,000, but $10,000 or $1,000,000 or more; and if he says it is a like case, that decides the whole question and the Government is bound. I should be surprised if the Senate would put this amendment in this bill.

Mr. BOGY. It seems to me that the proviso from line 126 down to line 149 ought not to be adopted. We cannot in this way modify the rights of these railroads, whatever those rights may be. If indeed any of these railroads have no right to charge, that matter is fixed by law. If they are allowed to make a charge by charter, that is also a right. I therefore believe that the entire proviso should be stricken out; the first part particularly, because it does say in so many words that no railroad which has received a subsidy in land shall charge for transportation, although it may be in so many words in the charter that it may charge. It says no railroad having received a subsidy shall charge for such transportation, no matter whether the right was given in the charter to charge or not.

Again, by a law passed a short time ago some of the railroads have a right to charge one-half and get the amount of money for it and the other half goes to their credit. Now, without going into this thing in five minutes, which cannot be done, it does seem to me the whole clause should be stricken out and let these railroads stand on their rights as now fixed by law and fixed by charter. You cannot modify these rights by legislation. The view taken by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. ALCOCK] is entirely correct. These conditions do not obligate these railroads to transport the troops and munitions of war. The condition was that the road itself should be at the use of the Government, not the means of transportation over the road.

No court in the world would construe it differently. The Senator from Mississippi is perfectly right about that. That has been the received construction. Therefore it seems to me we are attempting to legislate on a subject not exactly germane to this bill and which will be a nullity if it conflicts with the present law. You cannot change the rights of these parties, whatever those rights may be. They are fixed by charter and fixed by law, and nothing in this bill can change any of those rights. Therefore, if in order, I move to strike out from line 126 down to line 149.

Mr. MORTON. I do not agree in the construction of the language quoted in this clause with the Senator from Mississippi or the Senator from Missouri. That was not the intention when the clause was put into various railroad grants. The idea of these Senators is that the Government of the United States has a right to use the track free, but must furnish its own machinery, must furnish its own transportation upon the railroad track. That was not the idea when that clause was originally inserted in the railroad acts. The framers of those various acts understood just as we understand now that railroad companies furnish their own transportation, have their own locomotives and cars, and that the United States do not keep locomotives and cars to run upon different railroads that they may have occasion to use. Therefore the idea that that language means that the Government may use the tracks but must furnish its own transportation or rolling-stock, it seems to me cannot bear examination for a moment. When these land grants were first made containing these conditions that the Government should have a right to transport arms and munitions free of charge, giving lands that in some cases were sufficient to build the entire road, the idea was that the company were to take their own locomotives and rolling-stock and transport troops free of charge. I know the other construction has been claimed, but I never gave it a moment's consideration.

I do not understand this whole proviso, and I would like to know what it means. I thought when I first read it that it was plain enough. The first branch says—shall hereafter be paid to any railroad company for the transportation of any property, &c., over any railroad which, in whole or in part, was constructed by the aid of a grant of public land on the condition that such railroad should be "a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge."

That no money—

No money at any price—

Upon such a road no money is to be paid; and no money is to be paid further—or upon any other conditions for the use of such road for such transportation.

What does that mean? What are the "other conditions" which are referred to? They are not conditions for cheap transportation, for half fare, low rates, or uniform charges, because it begins by saying "that no money shall hereafter be paid." Therefore the other conditions must be that the road shall be absolutely free to the United States. Now when you come to apply that to the concluding part of the proviso it becomes absurd:

That the foregoing restriction shall not apply, for the current fiscal year, nor thereafter, to roads where the sole condition of transportation is that the company shall not charge the Government higher rates than they do individuals for like transportation, and when the Quartermaster-General shall be satisfied that this condition has been faithfully complied with.

After the next fiscal year this restriction shall apply to a road, that the Government is to be charged no more than individuals, but the restriction is that no money is to be paid. That is the beginning of it, that the Government is to pay no money; but this restriction is not to apply to a road where the Government is to pay no more than individuals until the year after next, and then after next year it is to pay no money according to the original restriction, so that it makes it absurd. It strikes me the whole thing is rather clumsy.

Mr. ALLISON. I think very likely the Senator from Indiana is right in reference to the operation of this clause. The clause down to "Provided further," in line 139, is precisely the language of the law of last year, except that that provision only applied to the appropriations of that year, and this provision is now made permanent. The language "or upon any other conditions for the use of such road for such transportation," was inserted in the bill last year, I take it, to cover the point made by the Senator from Ohio; that is, that no money should be paid to any of the Pacific Railroads for transportation, because there was a condition placed upon those railroads with reference to the transportation, but not the particular condition contained in the land-grant roads. That was a sort of omnium gatherum provision, which was to take in every railway that had received subsidies from the United States. When the Senate came to consider the proviso beginning on line 139, they found that the law provided that certain railway companies were permitted to charge the Government of the United States the same rates for Government transportation that they charged other transporters. Now, manifestly it would be unjust to say that that class of railways should transport Government troops and supplies for nothing, because that was not the agreement. Therefore this latter proviso was inserted with a view to exempt that class of railways from the provision contained in the first proviso. That is all there is of it.

Mr. MORTON. What I call my friend's attention to is this: that the restriction which is to be found on lines 126, 127, and 128, "that no money shall hereafter be paid," is in terms applied to a railroad company: after you pass to line 144, at the end of two years from this time, where the only restriction was that it should not charge more to the Government than it charged to individuals; and the Government is prohibited by the first restriction from paying it at all.

Mr. ALLISON. I would say that perhaps in line 140, where the words "foregoing restriction" occur, the latter should be "restrictions;" and I think it ought to be strictly "that the foregoing restrictions shall not apply to the current fiscal year nor thereafter to such railways," &c.

Mr. MORTON. But is applicable thereafter, and the "foregoing restriction" is that "no money shall be paid." It seems to me it makes it absurd as applicable to that second class.

Mr. ALLISON. That is to say, the foregoing restrictions shall not apply to the current fiscal year nor thereafter to this class of railways; that is, there shall be no restriction upon this class of railways. I think that is the meaning of it.

Mr. INGALLS. Strike out of the sentence the words "for the current and next fiscal years."

Mr. ALLISON. That is stricken out already by an amendment. The language now is—

That the foregoing restriction shall not apply for the current fiscal year nor thereafter to roads where the sole condition of transportation is that the company shall not charge the Government higher rates than they do individuals for like transportation.

It seems to me that is plain enough. Now, with reference to the policy of this provision, I think it is perfectly clear. The United States up to last year paid these land-grant railways for the transportation of troops and material of war. They did so during the whole period of the war. They refused at first to do so, but the railways refused to transport Government material. I remember perfectly well, and so do many other Senators, the long contest with the Illinois Central Railway Company. The Illinois Central Railway Company said to the Government, "You may take our road, but we cannot afford to transport the troops and supplies necessary to be transported by us during the war." Finally a compromise was made, by which the Government paid the Illinois Central Railway Company 66½ per cent. of the amount paid to it by others for transportation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Contrary to the charter.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not say whether it was contrary to or in accordance with the charter. The Government did so pay that company a large sum of money. Congress last year inserted the provision that this money should no longer be paid, and that these companies should go to the Court of Claims and settle their rights, whatever they might be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is entitled to five minutes on the new amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. Now I ask the attention of the Senator from Indiana. The Senator from Indiana assumes that there are railroad charters or acts granting subsidies to railroads in which there are provisions that the railroad company shall carry the troops and munitions of war of the United States free of charge. I have to say to him that if there is any such railroad grant or railroad charter, I have never seen or heard of it. The grant made by the Government to aid Ohio and Indiana in the construction of their canals contained exactly that provision; but in any railroad grant or railroad charter or railroad subsidy bill I have never seen such a provision.

Mr. MORTON. The grant to the Illinois Central is an instance.

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir. Now I will show the Senator he is mistaken. On the 20th of April, 1870, when the resolution respecting the Northern Pacific Railroad was under consideration, I moved this amendment:

Mr. THURMAN. I move this amendment to come in at the end of the resolution: "And the rights and privileges hereby conferred upon said company, and the grants of land hereby made to it, are conferred and made upon this condition: that said company, its successors and assigns, shall forever transport over said road and its branches, free from any toll or charge, all the troops, produce, stores, and munitions of war that may belong to the United States."

There was a distinct proposition. In opposition to that Mr. Howard, of Michigan, the chairman of the Pacific Railroad Committee, said as follows:

Mr. HOWARD. In reply to the honorable Senator I beg only to read the eleventh section of the charter, which says:

"And be it further enacted, That said Northern Pacific Railroad, or any part thereof, shall be a post-route and a military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and all other Government service, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charges for such Government transportation."

Showing that charges were to be made for Government transportation, but enabling Congress to regulate the tariff. Then he said:

Is not that reasonable and sufficient?

Mr. THURMAN. Is that enough? I say that was not enough in the original bill. The very passage read by the Senator shows that the company is to have the right to charge. I say that it ought never to be allowed to charge anything for this Government service.

Mr. HOWARD—

Now I call the attention of my friend from Indiana—

Mr. HOWARD. So has the Illinois Central, and we paid that company five or eight million dollars during the war for the transportation of troops. So has the Union Pacific and the California Pacific road. We are paying them annually liberal charges for the transportation of all sorts of military supplies and troops. So with the Eastern Division through Kansas, and the same clause is in all our railroad charters, I believe without exception, the Government standing in no better relation in respect to transportation than an individual stands, with this exception, that Congress may regulate the rate of charges on all these roads.

That was the statement made by that very well-informed Senator, the chairman of the Pacific Railroad Committee. After a long debate, in which I insisted and others insisted that as we were conferring new privileges and making large additional grants to the Northern Pacific Railroad, we ought to impose this additional condition, the question at last came to a vote; and let us see how the vote was. I am very glad to say that the Senator from Indiana was with me on that vote. Those who voted for my amendment were twelve, and twelve only:

Messrs. Ames, Bayard, Boreman, Cameron, Casserly, Harlan, McCreery, Morton, Pratt, Saulsbury, Willey, and Yates—12.

Those who voted in the negative were:

Messrs. Anthony, Brownlow, Chandler, Cole, Corbett, Cragin, Fenton, Flanagan, Fowler, Hamlin, Harris, Howard, Howe, Kellogg, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norton, Nye, Osborn, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Revels, Rice, Robertson, Sawyer, Scott, Spencer, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Trumbull, Williams, and Wilson—35.—Congressional Globe, part 4, 2d session 41st Congress, 1869-70, pages 2345, 2347, 2363.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. Now I move to strike out the last word in the last amendment in order that I may finish what I have to say, and then I shall not trouble the Senate any more.

I read that to show that, according to that statement—and I believe it to be true—we have never required what should have been required; we never have required one of these railroad companies, to whom we have made these immense grants, to carry the munitions of war and troops of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has his attention been called to the fourth section of the act of the 20th of September, 1850, granting lands to the State of Illinois and several other States in aid of railroads, among them the Illinois Central, which declares—

That the said lands hereby granted to the said State shall be subject to the disposal of the Legislature thereof, for the purposes aforesaid and no other; and the said railroad and branches shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States?

Mr. MORTON. I thought I was not mistaken about that.

Mr. THURMAN. That comes to the exact question here. That provision was that the road should be a public highway free from toll for what? The interpretation put upon it was not that the company was bound to perform the service, not that the company was bound to furnish the cars, and servants of the company to manage them, and carry the troops, but on the contrary it was that it simply authorized the Government to take possession of the road so far as was necessary for its own transportation, and run its own cars upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who put that construction upon it?

Mr. THURMAN. The Government put it on it, and, as Mr. Howard truly said, paid the Illinois Central $3,000,000 for transporting troops and munitions of war during "the late unpleasantness."

Mr. STEWART. The question came up here and was discussed by Judge Trumbull at great length, and the Senate decided it.

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly. The second proviso in this bill effectually nullifies the first one and makes the whole thing nugatory. There being the second proviso saying wherever the provision in the law is that the company shall carry the property or troops of the United States at the same rate charged individuals, then this provision shall not apply, and every company being precisely in that category described in the second proviso, the second proviso kills the first one stone dead, except that it opens the doors of the Court of Claims to the Lord only knows how many suits and the Government to ever so much litigation.

I withdraw my motion to strike out that word; I do not know what the word was.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the Senator from Ohio to say that no grant of land had been made to a railroad company upon the condition that the company should transport the troops and munitions of war free of charge.

Mr. THURMAN. I said I had never seen such a one, and the chairman of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, (Mr. Howard,) who was an exceedingly well informed man, said, as I read in the hearing of the Senate, that there was no such case.

Mr. INGALLS. I beg to call the attention of the Senator to chapter 270 of the laws of 1866, and I read from section 3, which says:

That the grant of lands hereby made is upon condition that said company, after the construction of its road, shall keep it in repair and use, and shall at all times transport troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon its road for the Government of the United States free from all cost or charge therefor to the Government when required to do so by any Department thereof.

Mr. THURMAN. What road is that? I am very glad to find one such law.

Mr. INGALLS. This is "an act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific Railway and Telegraph, from Fort Riley, Kansas, to Fort Smith, Arkansas." That road is now in operation.

Mr. THURMAN. That is the only one the Senator will find.

Mr. MORTON. That statute declares that the company shall transport free of charge, which means of course with her own rolling machinery.

Mr. THURMAN. That is only a little bit of a road.

Mr. BOGY. I wish to make an inquiry. Is my motion in order that I made awhile ago as an amendment to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota to strike out from line 126 down to line 149?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is in order, but the question must first be put on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to perfect the proviso proposed to be stricken out. The Chair will entertain the motion of the Senator from Missouri, but the motion of the Senator from Minnesota has priority.

Mr. HOWE. I want to make a suggestion, not to take any part in this debate. The Senator from Kansas has called our attention to the conditions named in a charter granted in 1866. That was after there had been several protracted discussions in the Senate as to what was the true interpretation of the conditions employed in the earlier grants, which conditions were that the roads should be a public highway for the use of the Government, conditions which made a charge upon the roadway and not upon the company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As was claimed.

Mr. HOWE. As was claimed, and as was decided by repeated votes in both Houses. To avoid that construction it seems that in subsequent grants, I do not know in how many, different language was employed with a view of making the charge upon the company instead of the roadway. Undoubtedly, I think that the language employed in the charter just read by the Senator from Kansas does make a charge upon the company.

Now the question I want to put is whether roads or companies having such grants as the Senator from Kansas has referred to will be concluded by the language employed in this section? This language says that no money shall be paid for transportation over roads where the Government has a charge upon the track; but there are other roads, it seems, where the companies are bound to convey property free. It seems to me those are excluded.

Mr. ALLISON. No: "or upon any other conditions."

Mr. HOWE. Then if they are included at all it is by the force of that last clause.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And that would include all railways. Then if you had made a grant of land to a company or to a State coupled with no condition in the world except that the road should be completed in ten years—nothing said about carrying troops—

Mr. ALLISON. The language is, "conditions for the use of such road."

Mr. BOUTWELL. The condition on which the grant was made.

Mr. HOWE. There is a condition, but if you mean to make these the operative words to hold the company which is expressly charged with the duty of carrying, it seems to me it will include all others.

Mr. RAMSEY. Does the Senator recognize the distinction between these simple land-grant roads and that Southern Kansas road which had not only land grant but the bonds of the Government?

Mr. EDMUNDS. My impression is that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY,] when it comes to be in order, is the true one to adopt until this subject can be looked into, and that is to strike out the whole of this proviso from line 126 to line 149. The Senator from Wisconsin has very aptly put the case on the words in lines 132 and 133, that if there were any conditions upon which a road was to be built no money is to be paid; and then he says that if the condition is that it shall be limited to a certain time, that is a condition, and of course it would not be just to say you would not pay money to such a corporation. On the other hand, there are some of these roads in whose charters or grants there are provisions that the aid we have given to them is a part of a general contract, one of the terms of which is that the interest shall be kept up—that is my construction of it; people differ about that, but I suppose I am right in that construction; another of the terms of which nobody disputes is that 5 per cent. of the net earnings shall be actually paid into the Treasury in order to secure a sinking fund for meeting the obligations of the United States in the way of bonds.

If the Senate cares enough about protecting the interest of the United States to examine this question, I think the motion of the Senator from Missouri, when it comes to be in order, ought to prevail, to strike out this whole proviso in order to have time to examine the question and to make such a provision as will secure the interests of the United States. Now, I maintain for one that if we have advanced money in aid of any particular railroad in paying interest upon its bonds or our bonds given in its aid, that company has no right, although it may be entitled to transportation pay like any other road with whom we have no relations at all, to ask us to pay it for transportation a certain sum of money so long as it owes a certain other sum of money which we have paid for interest upon its bonds. That is what I think. Other Senators may think otherwise.

Mr. SCOTT. That is already provided for in the act of 1873.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is provided for in the act of 1873, but this act of 1875 is a later act than the act of 1873; and if we in this act of 1875, this Army appropriation bill, provide for payment of moneys for transportation affirmatively, without any reference to the former acts, then the Executive Departments and the paying officers will be pressed by these railway companies to pay them, by force of this act, as the latest expression of congressional will instead of the act of 1873, and a pretty plausible argument might be made perhaps in support of that idea. It might be argued that we had receded from the position that we took in 1873, had by this act authorized the payment of money to railroad companies that were owing us all the time. Now for one I do not wish to do that.

If it be true that any railway company owes the United States for interest paid or owes the United States on the 5 per cent. which ought to have been paid into the Treasury on net earnings, then I think we are bound to the tax-payers by the highest possible obligations not to pay money to such a company until their engagements are made good. It is a case of set-off. So I think we ought to strike out this whole proviso in order that a clause may be framed which will put us on our just rights, whatever they may be thought to be.

When you come to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to add to the clause as it now stands, that to my mind is very objectionable indeed. It leaves to the executive officer, who may not be a lawyer, who may not be instructed by the Attorney-General, and to him through his clerks, he being unable to attend to everything, to decide that money shall be paid because it is in conformity to some previous decision in another case, when if it were left to a court no such decision would be made. In other words, you invest the executive officers of the Government with a judicial discretion in paying money out of the Treasury which in the end ought not to be paid. I think, therefore, that the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota ought not to be agreed to, and that the proposal of the Senator from Missouri ought to be, to strike out all this proviso in order that a proper section may be framed.

Mr. RAMSEY. I ask the Senator from Vermont whether at this time it is not the practice of the Departments to receive the adjudications of the courts and act upon them?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will answer the Senator from Minnesota. Undoubtedly it ought to be the practice of the Executive Departments to obey the law; but when, as has been shown in regard to every one of these railroads, there is some variation of circumstances, some variation of statute and all that sort of thing, it is very unsafe indeed to say that because one case is decided you will allow an Executive Department to determine that that is an authority for doing something else under a different charter—

Mr. RAMSEY. But the cases must be identical.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not what the amendment says.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there is some force in the statement made by the Senator from Vermont. The committee followed the language of the existing statute until we reached the last proviso, and it having passed through the scrutiny of the Senator from Vermont and every gentleman on the Judiciary Committee, or at least through the Senate last year, we did not scrutinize the language again.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not our scrutiny.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there is, as I said, force in his suggestion, and therefore I shall move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota on the table; and that being done I shall consent to strike out the entire proviso from line 126 to line 149, so that the matter may be perfected in the conference committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. RAMSEY. I suggest that this matter can be perfected by a committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. RAMSEY. I was only going to ask the Senator from Iowa to withdraw his motion and allow this amendment to be accepted and have the whole matter go to a committee of conference.

Mr. ALLISON. I would not like to do that. I insist on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan.) The Senator from Iowa moves to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] to strike out the proviso.

Mr. HAGER. I find that there are two copies of this bill, and some Senators are uncertain what the motion is. If I understand it, it is to strike out after the word "provided," on line 126 in the last printed bill, down to the end of that paragraph. I am not disposed to strike out, and I see no reason for striking out this portion of it—

That no money shall hereafter be paid to any railroad company for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States over any railroad which, in whole or in part, was constructed by the aid of a grant of public land on the condition that such railroad should be "a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge."

I see no reason for striking that out; on the contrary, I see great reason why it should remain. Why should we pay for that transportation if there is an existing law that it shall be exempt?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from California I am sure misunderstands me, so far as his remarks apply to what I have said. I do not propose to strike it out in the view of not having a provision in.

Mr. ALLISON. Nor do I.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But in order to cover the whole subject and have a suitable provision, which we cannot do at this moment.

Mr. HAGER. I have read this long provision over several times, and I agree with the Senator from Nevada that it is incomprehensible. The subsequent paragraphs are incomprehensible to me. Neither can I understand what is the meaning of the committee in the bill as reported from line 126 on page 6 down to the end of that paragraph. There are reservations and exceptions to the provision which throw so much obscurity and doubt over it that I am inclined to think that the whole provision would be destroyed by the clauses that follow:

Provided further, That the foregoing restriction shall not apply for the current fiscal year, nor thereafter—

It shall not apply to this year nor thereafter—

to roads where the sole condition of transportation is that the company shall not charge the Government higher rates, &c.

Then there is another provision:

And provided further, That hereafter when troops or officers change stations their families shall receive transportation over land-grant and subsidized railroads which receive no payments from the United States.

I do not understand that.

Mr. ALLISON. That is out now.

Mr. HAGER. It ought to be out. I will move, in order to get at this thing specifically, to strike out all after the words "United States," in line 136, to the end of the section. That will leave in the only substantial part there is. That will leave it to read from the word "provided" down to "United States" without any "ifs" and "ands" or reservations or exceptions, and then it will be a matter for the courts to determine what the rights of the respective parties are. I think it is not proper for us to invite litigation and invite prosecutions against the Government of the United States in a matter where we have the right to declare the terms on which a railroad shall carry freight, &c.; and yet that is the purport of this bill. We absolutely invite companies to go before the Court of Claims to prosecute for the very things that we except and reserve and say are reserved by the law. If a road is by the terms of the law "a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge," why should we say "provided nothing herein contained shall prevent" them from bringing a suit to recover that which we say is declared by law to be exempt from charge? That is incomprehensible to me. Therefore I make this motion to strike out beginning with the word "but" in line 136, to the end of the paragraph. That will leave the exception without the provisions, which look to me as if they were intended rather for the benefit of the companies than of the Government of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Did the Senator make a motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has moved to strike out a part of the paragraph.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Which part?

Mr. HAGER. I move to strike out from line 136 after the words "United States" to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have not been in the Senate while this discussion was going on, but I did pay some attention to these provisions in the committee. My understanding of them is that they run with the historic facts of legislation by Congress. First, it is provided that as to that class of roads which agreed to do free the business of the Government that they shall have no compensation and forbids the Government paying compensation. As regards the next class of roads, it provides that they shall charge the Government no more than they charge individuals. I think that is eminently fit. As to the third class it is undoubtedly in excess of any provision of any statute in regard to transportation or any obligation the roads have to do transportation for the Government. That relates to the imposition of carrying the families of officers or troops.

Mr. MORTON. That is stricken out.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. As to the rest of it, I think it is in strict conformity with the history of legislation on this subject, and I see no reason why it should not be adopted.

Now, can we not have a vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, proposing to strike out a portion of the paragraph.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 4, noes 36.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] to strike out the proviso from "provided" in line 126.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask the Chair what was stricken out by the last vote? The Chair stated that it was the proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There were two provisos stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wished to understand it so that there may be no mistake.

Mr. ALLISON. All is stricken out from line 126 to line 149.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HAGER. I understood the Senator from Vermont that when the clause was stricken out, it was to be in part restored—that part which I tried to preserve. As it now stands, it is legislation in favor of these railroads and it is putting ourselves in a position not to call on them to observe the condition of their subsidy that they should be a public highway for the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge. Inasmuch as that is stricken out, it will amount to legislation to a certain extent that we do not favor that proposition, but on the contrary we are disposed to waive that condition and still pay to these railroads for transportation that ought to be exempt. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to that view of the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 435, being a bill to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the said State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say that the gentlemen who have charge of the leading business of the Senate by bringing forward this bill put it out of my power to move to take up the civil-rights bill, as I had wished to do. I only rise to say that it is overpowering force, not my wishes, that prevents me making a motion to take up the civil-rights bill now.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not think with so thin a Senate we ought to fix on the order of business for to-morrow, and for that reason I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I want to appeal to the Senator from California. Two days ago the Senator from California prevented me by an objection from carrying a bill which—

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot pass that now.

Mr. CAMERON. Yes, I can. Just give me a moment. I want to take up that bill for the purpose of providing head-stones for the dead soldiers in the cemetery at York.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. CAMERON. I think it ought to be done, as the Senator from Iowa says. I am sure the Senator from California will give way.

Mr. SARGENT. If I had any idea that my friend could pass the bill I would most certainly do so.

Mr. CAMERON. Of course the bill will pass if I have time.

Mr. SARGENT. I insist on the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California insists on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CAMERON. I think not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMERON. I think there is a mistake about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. CAMERON. I am not going to debate it, but only to state a single fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California insists on the motion, and it is not debatable.

Mr. CAMERON. Well, Mr. President, I am not debating it. [Laughter.] Debate means an argument. I have only asked the Senator from California—

["Question."]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is called for, and the Chair must put the question on the motion to adjourn. The yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest that we divide; perhaps nobody wishes to adjourn.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No. I desire for a particular reason the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to say that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ] and the Senator in the chair [Mr. FERRY, of Michigan] are paired. If he were present the Senator from Missouri would vote "yea," and the Senator from Michigan "nay."

Mr. OGLESBY. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. WADLEIGH] said to me before going out that he was paired with some Senator—I have forgotten who it was, [laughter;] and asked me if I would explain it when the thing came up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair accepts the explanation. [Laughter.]

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Flanagan, Goldthwaite, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Scott, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Cameron, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Ramsey, Spencer, Stewart, Windom, and Wright—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Conover, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Jones, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Robertson, Schurz, Sherman, Wadleigh, Washburn, and West—23.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill for the admission of Colorado.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOGY. Now I move that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 21, noes 25.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. (when the roll-call was concluded.) I see that there is little more than a bare quorum now present. If it be in order now, by unanimous consent, I will move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nothing is in order until the vote is announced.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. By unanimous consent, I suppose—"No!"

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Cameron, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Edmunds, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Ramsey, Stewart, Windom, and Wright—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Jones, Lewis, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Robertson, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Wadleigh, Washburn, and West—27.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill at length.

Mr. MORTON. Has the bill been taken up?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been taken up, and will be read.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock and forty-three minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 23, 1875.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXHIBITION OF WORKS OF ART IN THE CAPITOL.

Mr. MONROE. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution. I have talked with all the gentlemen interested in the matter, and I believe it gives general satisfaction.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved. That it shall be in order when the sundry civil appropriation bill is under consideration in the Committee of the Whole to offer an amendment to said bill providing that no work of art, the property of a private individual, shall be exhibited in the Capitol without permission from the Joint Committee on the Library, given in writing, and making it the duty of the architect of the Capitol to carry this provision into effect.

Mr. KASSON. That is right; and I want to call attention to the fact that the present law on this subject is constantly violated.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JERSEY CITY.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent to have put on its passage now a bill which simply authorizes the condemnation of land for a site for a public building; it contains no appropriation whatever.

The bill (H. R. No. 4458) relating to a site for a public building at Jersey City, in the State of New Jersey, was read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Has that bill been considered by any committee?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I object to the consideration of the bill now.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask consent to report from the Committee on War Claims a bill making appropriations to pay claims allowed in the Departments. There is no legislation in it.

AFFAIRS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I rise to make a privileged report, to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to call the regular order, unless the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] says that this report is not to come back.

The SPEAKER. The committee is authorized to report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. But I desire to reserve the point which I reserved in regard to the report of the Alabama committee.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. This report is merely presented for printing and recommitment.

Mr. RANDALL. That is all right if it is not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I hope I may be permitted to make a statement which will occupy but a moment. I am authorized by the committee to report two resolutions for printing and recommitment. I am also authorized, when they come back from the printer, to call them up and have them put upon their passage.

Mr. RANDALL. I deny the right of the gentleman to do that under the conditions of the case.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I am also authorized by the committee to submit to the House the views of various members of the committee—the views of the particular individuals who sign them. I desire that the two resolutions may be read, and that all the statements of views may be printed, and the whole matter recommitted.

Mr. RANDALL. Not to come back?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Not to come back of course on a motion to reconsider. I also ask that they may all be printed in the RECORD. The committee have a right to report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. I propose to contest the right of the gentleman to bring this matter up again under the right to report at any time.

Mr. DONNAN. I object to the printing of these matters in the RECORD.

Mr. RANDALL. If the committee still have the right to report at any time after the presentation of this report and its recommitment, of course we must submit; but I deny that right; and I do not want to give the committee any additional right.

Mr. FOSTER. In connection with this subject, I submit the views of the majority of the committee. I ask that they be printed and recommitted.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I will inquire of the Chair whether the majority of the House have not the right to order these papers printed in the RECORD? I have at any rate the right to call for their reading, which would necessitate their printing in that way.

The SPEAKER. They can be printed in the RECORD if the gentleman insists on their being read, as he has the right to do.

Mr. DONNAN. I object to their being printed in the RECORD. They will no doubt come to us in documentary form.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolutions.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we have got "the cart before the horse." Is the report submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] the majority report or the minority report?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. It is the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is authorized by the committee to make this report.

Mr. RANDALL. The question is whether it is a majority or a minority report as made by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania had done me the honor to listen to me when I addressed the House—

Mr. RANDALL. You are mistaken; I listened to everything you said.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. It seems to me the gentleman from Pennsylvania is transgressing the rules of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. In what respect?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. In interrupting my statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The two resolutions I reported I am directed to report by the committee and to ask they be printed and recommitted. The views I report are the views of various members of the committee who signed their views. The committee authorized them to be communicated to the House, but they do not bind as an expression of opinion anybody but the particular gentlemen who signed them. This particular paper is signed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WHEELER,] the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] and myself. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] also proposes to submit another paper signed by others.

Mr. RANDALL. How many others?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. A paper containing their views.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Is there any resolution submitted by any other members of the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the question. All that is submitted for the action of the House comes as the recommendation of the committee. The different views in the report contain that which the House is not asked to act on at all. That on which action is asked will now be read by the Clerk.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, the House has to act on the resolutions, and to do so intelligently it ought to know what are the views of the majority of the committee.

The SPEAKER. They unite in recommending this report. The majority of the committee unite in recommending the reporting of these resolutions.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say that I did not mean to interrupt the gentleman from Massachusetts and I do not think he has a right to reflect upon me. I do not think there is any one in this House more uniform in courtesy toward other members than myself.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. There is no gentleman in this House who has a more thoroughly courteous nature than the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to rest under any imputation like that made by the gentleman a moment ago.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The gentleman interrupted a statement I was making to the Chair by an audible personal address to me out of order, and I answered a little impatiently, which I am sorry for.

Mr. RANDALL. My only object was to have the gentleman point out which is the majority report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read that on which action is asked by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 23, 1875.

The special committee to which was referred so much of the President's message as relates to the condition of the South report the following resolutions. They further submit the views of the various members of the committee. For the committee.

GEO. F. HOAR, Chairman.

Whereas both branches of the Legislature of Louisiana have requested the special committee of this House to investigate the circumstances attending the election and returns thereof, in that State, for the year 1874; and whereas said committee have unanimously reported that the returning board of that State in canvassing and compiling said returns and promulgating the result wrongfully applied an erroneous rule of law, by reason whereof persons were awarded seats in the house of representatives to which they were not entitled and persons entitled to seats were deprived of them.

Resolved, That it is recommended to the House of Representatives to take immediate steps to remedy such injustice and place all persons rightfully entitled to them in their seats.

Resolved, That William Pitt Kellogg be recognized as the governor of the State of Louisiana until the end of the term of office fixed by the constitution of that State.

Mr. POTTER. I wish to add one word. The fact is as stated by the chairman of the committee that the committee authorized its chairman to report to the House two resolutions. The first of those resolutions I believe all the members of the committee concurred in. The second resolution the three gentlemen alluded to by the chairman of the committee, together with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] concurred in.

The report made by the chairman of the committee is a report to the committee by three gentlemen—himself, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WHEELER,] and the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] and the report presented by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] presents the views of the other four members of the committee. That is, of the majority of the committee, the committee consisting of seven members.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee I wish merely to say now before this passes from the attention of the House this morning that while I have united in the presentation of the views which have just been submitted by the gentleman from Ohio, I desire also for myself to present some additional views to be printed and recommitted. But I do not have them here this morning, and I wish to state as the reason for not being able to present them now that the evidence, that taken by the sub-committee which first visited New Orleans and that taken by the other members of the committee more recently, has not been printed. Some of it has not been written out. A portion was taken by a short-hand reporter residing in Saint Louis; the other reporter being unwell and not able to perform the duty assigned him. That portion of the evidence I believe was taken to Saint Louis and I understand has not yet reached the city of Washington. I have been unable therefore as yet to get at the language I desired to use in presenting my individual views, and I shall in a day or two ask of the House the privilege of presenting my own individual views in addition to those presented by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] in which I join with him. I shall do so I think within a day or two. I suppose it might be understood this morning that I would have the right.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I hope that right will be accorded to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I now ask for the reading of the entire report. But I desire to say that in order to save the time of the House, if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DONNAN] withdraws his objection to its being printed in the RECORD, I will not ask for the reading of it in the House.

Mr. DONNAN. I desire to say one word to explain why I object to this being printed in the RECORD. We seem to be reaching a time when almost everybody seeks to have almost everything printed in the daily RECORD. We print this report as a document and some ten thousand extra copies of it. The only excuse for having it printed in the RECORD that I can conceive is that it may meet the eyes of every member to-morrow morning. Now, it can be printed and be before us just as well in a documentary form to-morrow morning. And we will thus save encumbering the RECORD unnecessarily.

One of the most important matters, it seems to me, which this Congress or the next Congress can consider is how we can decrease the bulk of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In the last session of this Congress it reached a bulk of no fewer than seven volumes; and now you are so encumbering it that it comes to us each morning with forty, sixty, or eighty pages, and it has even been in excess of that one morning last week.

As a document the usual number of copies of this report can be printed and laid on each member's desk to-morrow morning. There is therefore no necessity for publishing it in the daily RECORD, and no necessity for the gentleman from Massachusetts delaying the action of the House by insisting on the reading of the whole report that he may have it go into the RECORD.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I appreciate the force of the gentleman's argument. But I have stated on my responsibility as a member of this House that I think all the views which have been submitted by the different gentlemen on the committee on both sides are so important, and I believe they are so regarded by the House, that this report ought to go into the record of the proceedings of the House.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Right.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. And I desire to inquire of the Chair whether it is not my right to ask for the reading of the report?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Then I have to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he will require the House to sit here for an hour to listen to that report?

Mr. DAWES. I concur with my colleague [Mr. G. F. HOAR] as to the importance of having the report printed in a permanent form in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where it can be readily consulted. But I suggest that this is not a report which my colleague desires to have read. It is the views of minorities, except the report submitted by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] It is therefore admitted ex gratia, and can be admitted on any terms the House may choose to fix. No member I think can insist on having the views of any minority printed in the RECORD.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. In answer to my colleague, I desire to say that the committee authorized these various reports to be made as approved of by particular members of the committee.

Mr. DAWES. That may give it a different status.

Mr. DONNAN. I desire to say a word. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Massachusetts has declared that upon his responsibility as a member of this House he will delay the action of the House a sufficient time to have this entire report read, and inasmuch as I think I have shown the House that we may just as well have this report on our desks to-morrow morning for the consideration of every member in the form of a document, saving its going into the RECORD and being multiplied in bound volumes, I propose not to have the responsibility resting upon my shoulders of delaying the action of the House when it is so near the close of the session and public business is pressing us so much.

But, inasmuch as the gentleman assumes that responsibility and insists here upon the floor that he will delay the progress of business of the House this entire day, if it shall require it, in order to have the report read and thereby go into the RECORD, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. No further objections being made, the reports will be severally printed for the use of the House; also printed in the RECORD, and recommitted to the committee.

The following is the report submitted by Mr. FOSTER:

The undersigned, a majority of the Committee on the state of the South, respectfully report:

That they cannot agree to the report made to the committee by Messrs. HOAR, WHEELER, and FRYE.

The laws inimical to the colored people of Louisiana referred to in their report have been repealed for years. Except during the schism of Governor Warmoth, in 1872, the republican party has long had control of the machinery of the State.

The late registration shows an excess of the colored over the white voters, giving 90,781 colored to 76,823. In the absence of any direct evidence that the late election was not free and fair, the assumption by the minority that enough colored voters must therefore have been prevented from voting at the late election by the recollection of the Colfax and Coushatta killings and by other riots, which occurred years before, to have changed the result of the election throughout the State, is an assumption so violent—when it is recollected that both those parishes elected a full Kellogg ticket by republican majorities—as not to be received, if any other cause for the vote of the State can be found.

Such causes exist and are obvious. Among them are:

First. The registration was incorrect, and exceeded the true colored vote.

The registration was wholly in the hands of the Kellogg officials, with whom a republican committee, with United States Marshal Packard at their head, co-operated. In only three parishes did the republican supervisors of registration make any complaint of unfair or insufficient registration. On the other hand, very great complaint was made by the conservatives, who specified, with proof, fifty-two hundred cases of conceded false registration in New Orleans alone; and those conservatives who had been co-operating in joint party committee to secure a fair registration gave up the effort in despair.

The census of 1870 (the correctness of which is not impeached) showed 87,076 whites and 86,913 colored males over twenty-one years of age. All the statistics and evidence before us indicated no change in this proportion in favor of the colored voters. Yet the registration of colored voters exceeded by 4,000 the total number of colored adult males returned by the census, while the registration of white voters was 10,000 less.

Second. The whole number of voters registered was 167,604. Of these 146,523 voted. This is a larger proportion of registered voters than usually vote in any of the Northern States. In an agricultural State, sparsely settled, where long journeys had often to be made to reach the polls, it is unreasonable to suppose that a greater proportion of the registered blacks would have voluntarily turned out to sustain a government under which the prosperity of the State and their wages and the value of their shares of production had steadily declined than usually vote at elections.

Third. Eighteen hundred and seventy-four was a year of political change, in which the vote throughout all the States was seriously affected against the republican party—a change resulting largely from the financial distress of the people, and which should, therefore, naturally have been even greater in Louisiana than elsewhere.

Fourth. It became the interest of the conservatives, at least at the late election, not to intimidate, but to acquire by every fair means the colored vote.

Parties who were alleged to have threatened blacks even with refusal of employment, were subject to prompt arrest. It was known that pretexts would be sought to deprive the conservatives of the result if they prevailed in the election. It was therefore their interest to avoid giving any such pretexts. Accordingly they determined everywhere to co-operate with and conciliate the blacks. They voted down the propositions or suggestions which were made in the early part of the campaign for refusal to employ those colored voters who would not co-operate with them, and generally sought, by combining with colored voters, to carry the election.

Local combinations against the Kellogg candidates were made in many parishes by men of all parties and colors. In several parishes a Union ticket of colored conservative voters was voted for and elected. An intelligent colored witness testified that he "desired better government," and to that end "was willing to swallow the white men if the white men would swallow the colored." These cautions and feelings naturally united to swell the conservative vote in such localities exactly as indicated by the returns.

Fifth. The entire want of any direct evidence to show any general intimidation of the colored voters.

Of course in so large a State it would be impossible there should be no instances of refusal to employ nor of intimidation. Such occur in every State. But the evidence certainly indicates no general intimidation of colored voters, and that such intimidation as did exist in the State was rather in the interest of the republicans than of the conservatives. The United States marshals, whose chief was chairman of the republican State committee, armed in some cases by blank warrants, and aided by Federal troops, made constant arrests before election, but not afterward. The oversight of the elections and of the returns was in the hands of Governor Kellogg's officials. Their count and return did show 29 majority of members of the lower house elected by the conservatives without any protest whatever, except in three parishes, although it was their province and duty to protest in any case where violence or intimidation or fraud existed.

Indeed, the direct evidence as to the election of 1874, as well as the circumstances, clearly indicate a peaceable and fair election. In fact, after the visit of the first committee and the revisit of the special committee, the Kellogg party, with all their machinery for collecting evidence, were unable to produce in the entire State more than half a dozen persons to testify to anything impeaching the freedom and fairness of the late elections who were not office-holders or connected with office-holders.

Against such facts it seems to us idle to assume that the disturbances so vividly pictured by the minority could have kept up throughout this State such a feeling of intimidation as would justify the assumption that but for that feeling the State would have gone republican. All experience shows that the result of the election of 1874 in Louisiana, as returned to the returning board, was natural and to be only accounted for by the reasons we have given.

We hold, therefore, that in November, 1874, the people of the State of Louisiana did fairly have a free, peaceable, and full registration and election, in which a clear conservative majority was elected to the lower house of the Legislature, of which majority the conservatives were deprived by the unjust, illegal, and arbitrary action of the returning board.

To the resolutions reported to the House from the committee, as to the action of the returning board, we are all agreed.

We understand the committee to be unanimous in finding the fact that the action of the returning board has defeated the will of the people as expressed by them at the polls on the 3d of November, 1874. The people then elected to the lower house of their Legislature a majority of conservative members; a portion of the conservative members thus elected were refused their certificates. This is an act of great injustice to the individuals, of gravest danger to the State and free government, and ought to be immediately corrected by any power competent to correct it.

The resolution recommending the recognition of Governor Kellogg is based upon general information and not upon evidence. On this point no testimony was taken, either by the committee or any part of it. Kellogg may or may not have been elected in 1872, but there is no evidence to show the fact, or if there be, it has been neither sought nor found by this committee. Messrs. FOSTER and PHELPS think that the popular belief, taking both conservative and radical circles, inclines on the whole to justify Kellogg and Penn's claims; and that as Kellogg is and has been the acting governor of Louisiana for the past two years, to deny his right and install another in his place, after this lapse of time, might involve much mischief to the legal and political interests of the State.

To avoid the mischief and confusion of change, a majority of the citizens of Louisiana seem willing to accept as a compromise Kellogg's recognition and the restoration to the conservatives of the control of the lower house.

For these reasons Messrs. FOSTER and PHELPS do not wish to oppose the recommendation that the administration of Governor Kellogg be recognized; neither, in view of the fact that they know nothing of the merits of the case as judged by competent evidence, do they wish to be understood as urging it. They only wish to record their agreement with those of their associates who believe that such a compromise might, by making a termination of the uncertainty in Louisiana, be on the whole less intolerable than the present distress.

But to any resolution recognizing Kellogg Messrs. POTTER and MARSHALL are utterly opposed. They find nothing to justify the belief that Kellogg was elected. That he seized the government by the aid of Federal troops, through a void and fraudulent order which prevented the counting and return of the votes, should be a standing presumption against him. When the people, outraged by the abuses of his government, had successfully regained the office he had usurped, he was again reelected by Federal power. By the forms of legislation with which he had intrenched himself, he once more sought to nullify the choice of the people at the late election, and to that end called on the Federal troops to break up the meeting of a legislature.

For Congress to recognize usurpation so gross and so oppressive is, they think, to establish a precedent by which, under pretexts that can readily be found, any State government may be overthrown, the will of the people nullified, fraud and violence made permanent, and republican forms perverted to destroy liberty.

In their judgment all that is needed in Louisiana is to withdraw the Federal troops and leave the people of that State to govern themselves.

CHARLES FOSTER.
WILLIAM WALTER PHELPS.
CLARKSON N. POTTER.
SAMUEL MARSHALL.

The following was submitted by Mr. G. F. HOAR:

The special committee to whom was referred so much of the President's message as relates to the condition of the South report the following resolutions. They further submit the views of the various members of the committee.

For the committee:

GEORGE F. HOAR,
Chairman.

Whereas both branches of the Legislature of Louisiana have requested the special committee of this House to investigate the circumstances attending the election and returns thereof in that State for the year 1874; and whereas said committee have unanimously reported that the returning board of that State, in canvassing and compiling said returns and promulgating the result, wrongfully applied an erroneous rule of law, by reason whereof persons were awarded seats in the house of representatives of Louisiana to which they were not entitled and persons entitled to seats were deprived of them:

Resolved, That it is recommended to the house of representatives of Louisiana to take immediate steps to remedy said injustice and to place the persons rightfully entitled in their seats.

Resolved, That William Pitt Kellogg be recognized as the governor of the State of Louisiana until the end of the term of office fixed by the constitution of that State.

The undersigned, a portion of the special committee to whom was referred so much of the President's message as relates to the condition of the South, respectfully report:

The matters embraced in the reference to the committee are of the most serious and important character. In several of the Southern States a condition of affairs is said to exist which not only impairs the welfare of those States, but greatly endangers the peace and safety of the whole country. It seemed specially important to investigate and report to the House the state of things in Louisiana, as all parties there are agreed, for different reasons, in demanding the immediate interposition of Congress to redress grievances of which they bitterly complain.

One party in Louisiana assert that there is a conspiracy in that State, large in numbers and strength, though a minority of the legal voters, to take possession by force and fraud of the State government; to drive out of the State all white men who will not join in their schemes or refrain from any active resistance; to deprive the negro of the political and legal rights conferred on him by the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, and in some mode hereafter to be more fully made manifest to reduce him to such a condition of political and personal dependence upon the whites that the will of the latter shall be the law which determines his personal rights and fixes the price and condition of his labor. It is further charged that in the execution of this purpose vast numbers of murders have been committed; that the enforcement of the law has ceased over large districts; and that by terror, violence, and fraud the holding of fair and peaceable elections and fairly ascertaining the result has been rendered impossible.

The other party, denying these charges, claim that the State of Louisiana has fallen into the control of the negro population, under the lead of a few white persons, mostly adventurers from other States, who have possessed themselves of the State and local offices, which they have administered corruptly and wastefully for their personal gain, wasting the public revenues until taxes have become an intolerable burden and the commerce of the State almost destroyed; that the people of the State have twice fairly elected other officers; but that the popular will has been frustrated by fraud, which would have been ineffective but for the forcible interference of the National Government. They claim that whatever violence has been used on their side is but the natural action of freemen endeavoring to assert their political rights, or at least is to be pardoned to men smarting under a sense of wrong and tyranny.

Both sides agree that the party who do not now hold the State government of Louisiana are physically the strongest. It is only the National Government that keeps in place for an hour the governor, the Legislature, a large portion of the local officers (and perhaps the judiciary) of Louisiana. Their opponents are prepared and able to take possession of the State government at once, whenever the National Government will not interfere. It is further claimed that a condition not unlike that of Louisiana exists in several other Southern States.

In our judgment this condition of things is fraught with the gravest peril to the whole country. That the people of any State should be unwilling or unable to determine by peaceful and legal means the result of their elections, and that the President should be compelled to interpose the military force of the Government to prevent civil war, is itself a terrible misfortune. But the evil goes much further. Upon the elections in Louisiana, as in other States, depends the right to their seat of Senators and Representatives who are to aid in making laws for the whole country, and the choice of presidential electors, upon whose vote may depend the title to office of the President of the United States himself.

No party in the United States will like to submit to a result decided by the votes of electors chosen by such means. Each party will be likely to credit charges of fraud and violence made against its opponent, and to discredit like charges made against its own side. There is, in our judgment, the greatest danger that these elements may enter into the next national election to so great an extent that it may leave the real expression of the will of the people in doubt. In such case an appeal to force, like that which has been made in Louisiana, must result in civil war, spreading throughout the entire country.

That this result is desired and expected by some persons who are largely responsible for the troubles in Louisiana, we have great reason to believe. We append an article published in the New Orleans Bulletin of February 6, 1875, which exhibits the purposes of the contributors of that journal, and, we fear, faithfully reflects the views of many men who are active and influential in the State of Louisiana.

The committee have had access to the reports made and evidence taken by various committees of one or the other of the two Houses of Congress since the close of the war, and have taken into consideration well known and uncontested facts in the recent history of the country. A sub-committee visited the State of Louisiana, where they took oral and documentary evidence, reporting their conclusions in writing. Afterward the whole committee determined to proceed to Louisiana to make fuller investigation, which purpose they have executed, a quorum being in attendance during their entire stay. In discharging their delicate and responsible duties they have been deeply impressed with the importance of the questions which they had to consider to the people of Louisiana and to the whole country, and have endeavored to approach them without partisan bias.

The question with which the American people have to deal will be best understood not by fixing the attention upon the details of particular acts of outrage on the one side, or of special and extraordinary exertions of national power to prevent them on the other, both calculated to stir deeply the feelings of large masses of the people, but by a dispassionate consideration of the indisputable facts of history.

The people of the States which engaged in the rebellion were composed in large part of two classes—a dominant race of slave-holders and those who approved and sustained slavery, and a subject race of slaves.

Each of these classes possessed the virtues and the faults which might be expected from its condition. The dominant class were unsurpassed among the nations of the earth in courage, spirit, hospitality, and generosity to their equals. They were apt to command and apt to succeed. Constantly on the look-out for the dangers which attended the presence in their community of a large servile class, they acquired the habit of acting in concert in all matters which concerned their class interests. They were able politicians. With the love and habit of truth which becomes brave men in all common concerns, they were subtle and skillful diplomats when diplomacy was needed to accomplish any political end. Their whole society could unite as one man in attempting to create an impression which it was their interest to give, and to stifle all expressions of dissent. On the other hand, they were domineering, impetuous, impatient of restraint, unwilling to submit to any government which they did not themselves control, easily roused to fierce anger, and when so roused, both as individuals and as masses, cruel and without scruple. They never had learned to respect human rights, as such, or to tolerate the free expression of opinions which differed from their own, or to see dignity in manhood beyond their own class. It was such a people that engaged in the rebellion, and such a people who were required to live under a new order of things to which they had been led not by change of character or opinion, but by mere force of arms.

They had submitted to the national authority, not because they would, but because they must. They had abandoned the doctrine of State sovereignty which they had claimed made their duty to their States paramount to that due to the nation in case of conflict, not because they would, but because they must. They had submitted to the constitutional amendments which rendered their former slaves their equals in all political rights, not because they would, but because they must. The passions which led to the war, the passions which the war excited, were left untamed and unchecked, except so far as their exhibition was restrained by the arm of power.

On the other hand, the negro was, in his ordinary condition, gentle, patient, docile, affectionate, and grateful. His confidence was easily won. The fear of the whites and habit of submission had been implanted in him by ages of slavery. The virtues of frugality, of honesty, of respect for justice either in private or public concerns, had never been exhibited toward him by his superiors, and he was not likely to be an example of them in himself, or to be very exacting in demanding them in those whom he regarded as his friends.

It was to these two classes, varying in numbers, in the various Southern States, just about equal in the State of Louisiana, that the experiment of republican government was intrusted on their readmission to the Union at the close of the war.

To these were added a small number of persons who had, in the exercise of their undoubted privilege as American citizens, moved into the South from other States. The whole spirit and policy of American institutions has been to encourage immigration in the fullest and freest manner. In all our States the native of foreign countries is not only welcomed and attracted by all possible inducements to take up his residence, but he is in a brief time clothed with citizenship and awarded quite his full share of political influence and consideration. But the citizen from the North who moved into the South was quite commonly opposed in opinion to the old residents on public questions. This opposition made him the natural ally, and his superior education made him the leader of the colored population. It was only to be expected, unless the nature of man were in this case to be thoroughly changed, that he should be regarded by the native white citizen of the South with distrust and dislike, especially as he came into their State for the purpose of engaging in politics, or held high State or national office without the consent of the white inhabitants.

A still greater difficulty attended the problem. In every northern State the people had founded their institutions upon the theory that universal suffrage and universal education are inseparable. In some form of statement this axiom is declared in the constitution or laws of all of them. It has become a maxim too trite and familiar for repetition. No considerable number of American citizens of northern birth could be found who would not agree that their own institutions would have proved a disgraceful and disastrous failure but for the common school. Yet the representatives of these same States, while imposing by national authority universal suffrage upon communities to all whose previous opinions and habits it was totally alien, made no provision for securing to the freedmen the defense of education. Of the number of males over twenty-one in the State of Louisiana in 1870, there were by the census, white 87,066, colored 87,121; total, 174,187. Of the whole colored population over twenty-one there were 157,049 who could not read and write. If half these were females, we have of colored voters who are reported as illiterate 78,524 out of 87,121.

These masses of illiterate voters must of necessity to a very large extent be instruments in the hands of others, who can influence their passions or excite their fears.

This condition has not improved since 1870. There is reason to believe that the illiteracy of the colored people is diminishing and that of the whites increasing; but the whole condition is not much, if any, improved. The total number of children in Louisiana between six and twenty-one years in 1874 is estimated by the State superintendent of schools at 280,357. The number of children enrolled in the public schools in 1874 is 74,309. The report of the State superintendent at the beginning of the last year shows an improvement in the educational condition of the State over the two or three previous years, but yet exhibits a sad array of facts. In some parishes there are no public schools; in others there are scarcely any. The enrollment above reported is a mere shell in many parishes, indicating an attendance of only a few weeks at school.

With these elements a great part of the political history of Louisiana for the past ten years might have been predicted by the most ordinary intelligence. Some of the occurrences which we are constrained to report are of a nature so cruel and barbarous as to excite astonishment in any people making the least pretense to civilization. But bloodshed, lawlessness, attempts by minorities to gain political power by force, delusions inflaming great bodies of people, unrelenting hatred of opponents, and the use of these as instruments by designing and unprincipled leaders—all these things were almost inevitable. We find them existing to an extent which has almost overthrown republican government in one State, and if not checked are a dangerous menace to the peace of the whole country.

On the other hand, the interference of national authority, even where that was imperatively required by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and the expression of public sentiment at the North, did not tend toward a cure of the trouble. Our institutions and all the habits of our people are founded upon the principle of local self-government. The institutions of this country imply, for their successful and harmonious working, that in every village throughout the whole country any twelve men placed upon a jury by lot will decide all causes, civil and criminal, according to the law and the fact; and that every small local organization, ward, township, or parish, will elect local officers who will honestly and truly declare the result of all popular elections so far as their jurisdiction extends, and the whole body of members returned to any Legislative Assembly will honestly and fairly determine the right of every person claiming membership therein, as the question arises in each individual case. Whenever this presumption fails to be true, so far local self-government fails. In such cases the Constitution furnishes machinery by which the National Government may interfere for the protection of the rights of the people. But this machinery has been seldom used; it is clumsy and difficult of management, and always tends to excite and alarm the whole people.

Whenever there is interposition of the National Government, either to guarantee republican government menaced in any State, to repress civil disorder on application of the State authority, to secure freedom of election, or the rights declared by the constitutional amendments, the political party in power in the National Government is, of course, properly held responsible. The party in opposition makes these exertions of power the especial points of its attack, and are disposed to deny or distort the occurrences that give rise to them.

The party in opposition is tempted to make the cause of those who are encountering the administration its own. Whether arrayed under the same party name or not, it looks for their votes in aiding it to displace its political opponents. It is thus naturally led to excuse or to deny all the facts on which the administration rests its justification for its extraordinary exercise of power. The supporters of the administration, on the other hand, are tempted to extenuate or overlook whatever may be wrong in the conduct of the State governments administered by their own political friends. So that the public sentiment of the rest of the country stimulates and aggravates the evil which it has so deep an interest to cure.

The committee have taken much evidence as to the opinion and purposes of the people of Louisiana, the history and conduct of her State administration, the acts of the local and State officials whose duty it was to conduct the late election and ascertain and declare the result, and upon the crimes and outrages which are said to have interfered with the freedom and fairness of the election. A great deal of this testimony is conflicting. We are aided in determining the probability of the story on each side by a recurrence to the previous history of the State.

After the war closed the whites of Louisiana were permitted to elect a Legislature, which sat during the years 1865, 1866, and 1867. They enacted a series of laws which must have been designed to restore the negro to a State of practical servitude. Statute of 1865, chapter 10, provides that under penalty of fine or imprisonment no person shall carry fire-arms on to the premises or plantation of any citizen without the consent of the owner, thus depriving the great mass of the colored laborers of the State of the right to keep and bear arms, always zealously prized and guarded by his white employers.

Statute 1865, chapter 11, punishes by fine and imprisonment the entering upon any plantation without the permission of the owner, thus preventing any person from seeking any intercourse with the negro for the purpose of giving political or other information except such as his master should approve.

Statute 1865, chapter 12, authorizes any justice of the peace, on complaint that any person is a vagrant, on summary process to require such person to give bond for his good behavior and future industry for the period of one year. On failing to give such bond, the justice shall issue his warrant to the sheriff to hire out such person for the term of twelve months, under such regulations as may be made by the municipal authorities: Provided, That if the accused be a person who has abandoned his employer before his contract expired, the preference shall be given to such employer of hiring the accused. Thus putting it into the power of any local magistrate, on summary process, to remand the laborer to a condition of practical slavery.

Statute of 1865, chapter 16, enacts that any person who shall persuade or entice away, feed, harbor, or secrete any person who leaves his employer without permission, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment of not more than twelve months, or both. Thus no laborer can leave his employer without leave without becoming an outcast, to whom food and shelter must be denied by all mankind.

Statute of 1865, chapter 20, imposes fine and imprisonment on any person who employs any laborer already under contract to another.

Statutes of 1867 authorized the imposition of a poll-tax for highway purposes to the amount of fifteen dollars. Under this law it would be possible to raise the sum of $2,612,000 in the State in a single year, which should be divided per capita among the males over twenty-one, rich and poor paying the same sum. These laws perished with the overthrow of the government which enacted them, in 1867.

In 1864 a convention was held which framed the constitution of the State. It adjourned subject to the call of its president. In 1866 it was summoned to meet again in New Orleans, to consider some proposed amendments to the constitution, which had gone into effect. It was claimed that by the adoption of the constitution its functions were exhausted, and that its future assembling could have no official character. If this were true it would seem to have been harmless.

Its members were unarmed and unprepared for resistance. This body was set upon in the hall where it assembled by a mob consisting of citizens and policemen of New Orleans. In the language of the report of the congressional committee of the House of 1866, who fully investigated the whole transaction, "There has been no occasion in our national history when a riot has occurred so destitute of justifiable cause, resulting in a massacre so inhuman and fiendlike. The massacre was begun and finished at midday. An intention to disperse and slaughter the members of the convention and those persons, white and black, who were present and friendly to its purposes, was mercilessly carried into full effect." The police were active on the side of the rioters. Two hundred and sixty persons were killed. The report proceeds:

"The committee examined seventy-four persons as to the facts of violence and bloodshed upon that day. It is in evidence that men who were in the hall, terrified by the merciless attacks of the armed police, sought safety by jumping from the windows, a distance of twenty feet, to the ground, and as they jumped were shot by police or citizens. Some, disfigured by wounds, fought their way down stairs to the street, to be shot or beaten to death on the pavement. Colored persons at distant points in the city, peaceably pursuing their lawful business, were attacked by the police, shot, and cruelly beaten. Men of character and position, some of whom were members and some spectators of the convention, escaped from the hall covered with wounds and blood, and were preserved almost by miracle from death. Scores of colored citizens bear frightful scars more numerous than many soldiers of a dozen well-fought fields can show, proofs of fearful danger and strange escape. Men were shot while waving handkerchiefs in token of surrender and submission. White men and black, with arms uplifted praying for life, were answered by shot and blow from knife and club; the bodies of some were 'pounded to a jelly'; a colored man was dragged from under a street-crossing and killed at a blow; men concealed in outhouses and among piles of lumber were eagerly sought for and slaughtered or maimed without remorse; the dead bodies upon the street were violated by shot, kick, and stab; the face of a man 'just breathing his last' was gashed by a knife or razor in the hands of a woman; an old, gray-haired man, peaceably walking the street at a distance from the institute, was shot through the head; negroes were taken out of their houses and shot; a policeman riding in a buggy deliberately fired his revolver from the carriage into a crowd of colored men; a colored man two miles away from the convention hall was taken from his shop by the police, at about four o'clock on the afternoon of the riot, and shot and wounded in side, hip, and back. One man was wounded by fourteen blows, shots, and stabs; the body of another received seven pistol balls. After the slaughter had measurably ceased, carts, wagons, and drays, driven through the streets, gathered the dead, the dying, and the wounded in 'promiscuous loads,' a policeman, in some cases, riding in the wagon, seated upon the living men beneath him. The wounded men, taken at first to the station-house or lock-up, were all afterward carried to the hospital. While at the station-houses, until friends found them with medical aid, they were left to suffer; when at the hospital they were attended to with care and skill. But this was done at no cost to the city or to the State."

Without asking permission, so far as the committee learned, those wounded men were carried to the hospital under the care of the Freedmen's Bureau, and shelter, surgical treatment, and food were furnished at the cost of the United States.

In the year 1868, the year of the presidential election, occurred six bloody and terrible massacres: the Bossier Parish massacre, the Saint Landry massacre, the Orleans, the Caddo, the Jefferson, and the Saint Bernard. The following summary of testimony will be found in Mr. Poland's report, Forty-second Congress, second session, report No. 22, pages 21, 22.

The testimony shows that over two thousand persons were killed, wounded, and otherwise injured in that State within a few weeks prior to the presidential election; that half the State was overrun by violence; midnight raids, secret murders, and open riot kept the people in constant terror until the republicans surrendered all claims, and then the election was carried by the democracy. The parish of Orleans contained 29,910 voters, 15,020 black. In the spring of 1868 that parish gave 13,973 republican votes; in the fall of 1868 it gave Grant 1,178, a falling off of 12,795 votes. Riots prevailed for weeks, sweeping the city of New Orleans and filling it with scenes of blood, and Ku-Klux notices were scattered through the city warning the colored men not to vote. In Caddo there were 2,987 republicans. In the spring of 1868 they carried the parish. In the fall they gave Grant 1 vote. Here also were bloody riots. But the most remarkable case is that of Saint Landry, a planting parish on the river Teche. Here the republicans had a registered majority of 1,071 votes. In the spring of 1868 they carried the parish by 678. In the fall they gave Grant no vote—not one—while the democrats cast 4,787, the full vote of the parish, for Seymour and Blair.

Here occurred one of the bloodiest riots on record, in which the Ku-Klux killed and wounded over two hundred republicans, hunting and chasing them for two days and nights through fields and swamps. Thirteen captives were taken from the jail and shot. A pile of twenty-five dead bodies were found half buried in the woods. Having conquered the republicans, killed and driven off the white leaders, the Ku-Klux captured the masses, marked them with badges of red flannel, enrolled them in clubs, led them to the polls, made them vote the democratic ticket, and then gave them certificates of the fact.

In the year 1873 occurred the transaction known as the Colfax massacre, to which the committee directed special attention. They had before them all the evidence on the trial of Cruikshank and others in the circuit court of the United States for conspiracy and murder, and the charge of the judge. They also called the district attorney and Mr. Marr, the counsel who defended the prisoners, who made full statements of the case as they claimed it to be. It seems to us there is no doubt as to the truth of the following narrative: In March, 1873, Nash and Cagaburt claimed to be judge and sheriff of Grant Parish under commissions from Governor Warmoth. After Governor Kellogg succeeded Warmoth their friends applied to him to renew their commissions. He refused, and commissioned Shaw as sheriff, and Register as judge. They went to the court-house, which they found locked, and Shaw and the other parish officers entered it through the window. Six days after, hearing rumors of an armed invasion of the town to retake the court-house, Shaw deputized, in writing, from fifteen to eighteen men, mostly negroes, to assist as his posse in holding the court-house and keeping the peace. The next day,

April 1, a company of from nine to fifteen mounted men, headed by one Hudnet, came into Colfax, some of them armed with guns; and on the same day one or two other small armed squads also came into town. This day no collision occurred.

April 2, a small body of armed white men rode into the town, and were met by a body of armed men, mostly colored, and exchanged shots, but no one was hurt.

These proceedings alarmed the colored people, and many of them, with their women and children, came to Colfax for refuge, perhaps a majority of the men being armed.

April 5, a band of armed whites went to the house of Jesse M. Kinney, a colored man, three miles from Colfax, and found him quietly engaged in making a fence. They shot him through the head and killed him. This seems to have been an unprovoked, wanton, and deliberate murder. This aroused the terror of the colored people. Rumors were also spread of threats made by them against the whites.

April 7, the court was opened and adjourned. The alarm somewhat subsided, and many colored people returned to their homes, the others maintaining their possession of the court-house, the whites maintaining an armed organization outside the town.

April 12 the colored men threw up a small earth-work near the court-house.

Easter Sunday, April 13, a large body of whites rode into the town and demanded of the colored men that they should give up their arms and yield possession of the court-house. This demand not being yielded to, thirty minutes were given them to remove their women and children. The negroes took refuge behind their earth-work, from which they were driven by an enflaming fire from a cannon which the whites had. Part of them fled for refuge to the court-house, which was a one-story brick building, which had formerly been a stable. The rest, leaving their arms, fled down the river to a strip of woods, where they were pursued, and many of them overtaken and shot to death.

About sixty or seventy got into the court-house. After some ineffectual firing on each side the roof of the building was set fire to. When the roof was burning over their heads the negroes held out the sleeve of a shirt and the leaf of a book as flags of truce. They were ordered to drop their arms. A number of them rushed out unarmed from the blazing building, were met by a volley, and a number killed and wounded, others were captured. Fifteen of the blacks crept under the floor of the burning building, but were all captured. The number taken prisoners was about thirty-seven. They were kept till dark, when they were led out two by two, each with a rank of mounted whites behind them, being told that they were to be taken a short distance and set at liberty. When all the ranks had been formed the word was given, and the negroes were all shot. A few who were wounded, but not mortally, escaped by feigning death.

The bodies remained unburied till the next Tuesday, when they were buried by a deputy marshal from New Orleans. Fifty-nine dead bodies were found. They showed pistol-shot wounds—the great majority of them in the head, and most of them in the back of the head.

Two white men only were killed in this whole transaction, Hodnet, the leader, and one Harris. It is pretended, and this pretense is used to give some palliation for the crime, that these men were bearing a flag of truce from the besiegers, and were shot from within the court-house. But among all the witnesses examined there was but one who pretended to have seen any flag of truce in their hands; he was twelve to fifteen hundred feet off across the river. His evidence hardly bears that construction as will be seen by referring to it. On the other hand, Hodnet was killed by a bullet which entered the back of his neck, and Harris by one that entered at the side. To believe this claim would require us to find that the negroes who, so far in the fight had been unable to harm a single one of their adversaries pent up in the building to which they had fled for refuge, with the roof blazing over their heads, compelled to choose between death by fire and the tender mercies of the foe, fired on the men who were bringing them offers of quarter, and that they were carrying the flag backward. No; this deed was without palliation or justification; it was deliberate, barbarous, cold-blooded murder. It must stand, like the massacre of Glencoe or of Saint Bartholomew, a foul blot on the page of history.

Spread over all these years are a large number of murders and other acts of violence done for political ends. In reply to an inquiry of the committee, General Sheridan, who is gathering careful statistics of the number of persons killed and wounded in Louisiana up to February 8, 1875, since 1866, on account of their political opinions, reports the number so far ascertained to be as follows:

Killed.....	2,141
Wounded.....	2,115
Total.....	4,256

Much evidence was taken by the committee from persons of both political parties in regard to this matter. Lists of homicides in different parishes were produced before the committee by persons familiar with the localities. On one side it was denied that these grew to any great extent out of politics. On the other, statements were made which would tend to show that the murders reported to General Sheridan fell far short of the truth.

But the statements on both sides left it beyond dispute that murders were events of the most ordinary occurrence, so as hardly to make an impression on the memory of intelligent men in whose neighborhood they occurred; and this not only in cities, but in rural communities; that there existed throughout a great part of the State an intense degree of political heat and hatred; that as a rule homicide, murder, and assault with intent to kill went without legal punishment; that the white men generally went armed. Under all the circumstances we do not doubt the substantial truth of General Sheridan's statement.

We have recapitulated these events which took place before the campaign of 1874, not because we desire to keep alive their painful and odious memory, but because it is absolutely necessary to do so to interpret the events of that campaign. In determining whether the negro voter was intimidated in 1874 to an extent which seriously affected the result of the election, we cannot agree with those who think no evidence should be weighed but that of matters since September of that year, and who deem it of no consequence that two thousand political murders had been committed and the murderers were at large. In determining whether the Coushatta and other like deeds were the outbreaks of freemen smarting under a sense of oppression and were enacted for the purpose of establishing a minority in power by the strong hand, it is of some consequence to know whether the same men did the same thing before the matters of which they complain as invasions of their own rights took place. In deciding whether their assertions are true, that they desire that the negro shall enjoy all his constitutional rights to freedom, to the suffrage, to equality before the law, it is important to know whether they tried to wrest them from him on the last occasion when they had undisputed legislative sway.

We now come to the events of 1874. The campaign was inaugurated by the formation of a party designed to divide the people of Louisiana on the line of race. Its convention at Baton Rouge begins its address, "We, the white men of Louisiana." This party assumed various names in various localities, almost always indicating a purpose to make the race issue distinct.

Agreements were entered into in various parishes, signed by hundreds of planters, to employ no laborer who did not vote their ticket. Handbills like the following were circulated in French and English:

"Louisianais: Pour sauver votre patrie, il faut renvoyer les nègres. (Par la faim, animal le plus féroce est dompté.)"

"Louisianians: To save your country, do not employ the negro. Wild beasts can only be tamed by hunger."

After the White League rising of September 14, 1874, an account of which is given hereafter, risings took place in many parishes. The Kellogg officers were driven from power and compelled to fly for their lives. After the re-establishment of the Kellogg government, in some cases the officers were not permitted to resume their functions.

The speeches at public meetings and leading articles in the press urged the people to deeds of violence. We submit a collection of extracts taken from many leading and influential journals published in various parts of the State. We have not space to make extracts from them in this report. They are enough of themselves to establish its conclusions as to the purposes and conduct of the leaders of the white men's party in the campaign of 1874.

It is impossible to state in the space which this report can properly cover the details of the deeds of lawless violence which were proved before the committee. In many parishes the legal officers were driven out by force. Republicans were murdered or compelled to fly for their lives. Whatever the pretext, the real offense was their political opinions.

Ruford Blunt, State senator, an eminent and influential colored preacher in the Baptist Church, whose efforts to establish schools in the parish are highly spoken of in the report of the State superintendent of education, was compelled to promise to give up all politics, and afterward to fly for his life.

Allen Greene, a State senator, a native of Georgia, who had lived in the State for many years, had established in the parish of Lincoln a tannery and shoe manufactory. Hides and bark were produced in abundance in the neighborhood. Mr. Greene had furnished machinery which required the employment of skilled labor, and had introduced about eighty workmen from New England, to whom he paid an average of thirty dollars per month, making a pay-roll of $2,500 per month to be expended in the town. In May, 1874, Mr. Greene was required to resign his office, with threats against his life. His workmen were so disturbed by the condition of things that they refused to remain, and a new body who had been engaged in Massachusetts, hearing of the rising of September 14, refused to keep their engagements. Thus the people of the parish of Lincoln prefer to send their hides half way across the continent, have them tanned and manufactured into boots and shoes in Massachusetts by workmen to whom the flour, sugar, rice, and cotton are in like manner conveyed, and then brought back to Louisiana in the form of boots and shoes, and to pay tribute to the manufacturer in Massachusetts, to the carrier and commission merchant, rather than to allow manufactures to be carried on in their own State by men who may be allowed the free expression of their political opinions.

The story of Judge Myers.

H. C. Myers resides in the parish of Natchitoches, about five hundred miles above the city of New Orleans, on Red River; has lived there eighteen years. His wife and their six children were born there. For several years he was register of the United States land office for the northwestern district of Louisiana; was elected parish judge in 1870 and 1872, which position he held until February, 1874, when he was appointed judge of the seventeenth judicial district of that State, comprising the parishes of Natchitoches, Sabine, De Soto, and Red River. He appears to be a man of good education, of culture, of refined speech and manners; and your committee fail to see that any charges of mal or misfeasance in office was at all sustained. Early in the spring of 1874 there were nursed and assiduously cultivated in that parish fierce and clamorous political antagonisms. The White League was organized; the removal of all republican office-holders determined upon; and, as has been well said of another locality, "the air was full of assassination." In May notices were posted in conspicuous places, as follows:

"K. K. K.

"Boulet, Myers, and all other radicals in this parish. Your fate is sealed. Nothing but your blood will appease us. The people of Natchitoches, Sabine, Winn, De Soto, Rapides, Red River, Bienville, Claiborne, Jackson, and Caddo are ready at a moment's notice, and will exterminate all radicals."

About this time Judge Myers was warned that his life would be forfeited if he remained another day at his home. His wife, two of his children, and his aged father were sick, one of the children and the father hopelessly, so says the judge, "Quite sick, my little child dying, my aged father, at the other end of the town, also dying, I kissed my little baby, placed it in the care of its weary mother and the Almighty; I left my home, not daring even to visit my father."

The judge and Judge Boncet fled in the night-time by circuitous paths, without even a change of clothing, lest it might lead to suspicion, and finally arrived at New Orleans. From that day to now he has never ventured to his home and dares not do so. In less than a week after he left the babe died, and the father too. "And," says the wife in her testimony, "I was left alone with my sick and dying children. None of my neighbors came to my assistance. My child died. I sent to the tomb-builder to make its little tomb, and he being a democrat refused to do it." From the testimony of the judge and his wife, and incidentally of others, your committee are compelled to believe this a true story.

We were anxious to obtain the facts in the terrible tragedy of Coushatta, and were able to do so from several witnesses, but principally from Mr. Twitchell, a brother of one of the victims, and from Mr. Abney, a merchant of that town, whose reluctant admissions, under a rigid cross-examination, satisfied us was the chief conspirator. This is the fearful story, proven to our satisfaction.

The Twitchell brothers, from New Hampshire, both young and active men of business, one a man some time married, the other but a short time before his death, with five or six other men from the North with their families, settled in this little town, bringing with them earnestness of purpose, integrity, economy, and habits of industry. The reasonably expected results followed; the hamlet grew into a prosperous and flourishing New England village, with its saw and grist mills, its factory, its stores and store-houses, its pleasant white-painted houses with their lawns and gardens, its churches and school-houses. Business flourished. About twelve hundred colored men were gathered into the village. Their labor was in demand, their wages good, and promptly paid. Their children eagerly availed themselves of the school privileges abundantly afforded. The colored voters finding that these men never betrayed their confidence, but in all things were aiding them, elected them to the several parish offices; and they, thus elected, from a sense of duty, honestly and faithfully administered the same. Everything in the village was prosperous, peaceable, and happy. But there was there a small party of white conservatives, headed by Mr. Abney, who determined to rule, who acknowledged no right to the black man but that of service, who had no feeling toward their white neighbors recognizing in the black a citizen other than intense jealousy and hatred. The usual result followed.

August 25, 1874, these officers were waited upon and ordered to resign; they declined; then they were informed that death alone was the alternative. Knowing that the inexorable decree had gone forth, that nothing, neither service to the town, to the State, to their neighbors, nor the faithful performance of duty, nor virtue, nor integrity, nor prayers of themselves, of wives, of little children could save, they besought their cruel neighbors to send them in safety out of the State, promising never to return. An escort was raised by this man Abney of twenty mounted men, the prisoners taking all their ready money, about $2,000, placed themselves in the hands of the guards. Abney issued military orders to what he called political clubs, but we believe white-leaguers, along the route, to furnish aid, supplies, &c. The march was commenced, and within thirty miles of their homes these prisoners were all murdered, terribly mutilated, buried, and no father, widow, brother, or son was permitted even to visit their graves until the bodies were decomposed. None of the white men's party have ever sought the murderers; no pursuit has ever been made, no inquiries ever set on foot by them. A man riding one of the horses of one of the dead men has been seen in the parish, but no one arrested his course or asked him about the bloody deed. No republican, white or black, has dared to commence proceedings. Abney was arrested and admitted to bail in a small sum, and with impunity insults the majesty of outraged law by boldly appearing as a witness before this committee. More, he was introduced by the conservatives to the witness-stand with a flourish of trumpets as a leading merchant of that section of the State. A brief extract from his cross-examination will indicate his connection with the crime.

Mr. FRYE. Was there not one other officer at that time requested to resign?

Mr. ABNEY. Yes.

Mr. FRYE. What was his name?

Mr. ABNEY. Scott.

Mr. FRYE. Was he killed?

Mr. ABNEY. No.

Mr. FRYE. Did he go with your guard?

Mr. ABNEY. No.

Mr. FRYE. Why not?

Mr. ABNEY. I wouldn't let him; I compelled him to remain behind.

Mr. FRYE. Was he a master mason?

Mr. ABNEY. Yes.

Mr. FRYE. Were you a master mason?

Mr. ABNEY. Yes.

Mr. FRYE. Were any others of the persons masons?

Mr. ABNEY. I did not know that they were.

Now, against those murdered men no crime was charged, no dishonesty alleged, no malfeasance of office proved. Abney alone said they had cheated in certain contracts, but your committee gave no credit whatever to his testimony.

Thus by the murderous hands of neighbors, of men who pride themselves upon their position in society, of those who had never received from the victims other than kindness, were these men deliberately slain; and there is practically no law in Louisiana to bring them to punishment.

WHITE LEAGUE.

The White League is an organization which exists in New Orleans, and contains at least from twenty-five hundred to three thousand members, armed, drilled, and officered as a military organization. Organizations bearing the same name extend throughout many parts of the State. It was pretended that this organization in the city was simply as a volunteer police force, the regular police being inefficient; that it has no connection with associations of the same name in other parts of the State, and that these latter are large political clubs without military organization or arms. A brief examination and a brief cross-examination effectually dispelled this pretension. Several of its members and officers were examined before the committee. So far as was shown this organization in no single instance performed police functions. Its organization, equipment, drill, and discipline were wholly military. Its name was not appropriate to a volunteer police, but was appropriate to an association designed to put the whites of the State into power by force. It had cannon. On the 14th of September, 1874, it rose upon and attacked the police of the city, the pretext of the attack being the seizure of arms which it had imported from the North, and having defeated them with considerable slaughter, it took possession of the State-house, overthrew the State government, and installed a new governor in office, and kept him in power until the United States interfered. This rising was planned beforehand. Its commanding officer, Ogden, published an elaborate and pompous report of his military movements, in which he expresses his thanks to his aids and other officers for their important and valuable services before and during the day of action. In other parts of the State organizations under the same name existed, and we have no doubt their purposes and methods were also identical. In one parish their meetings were called by notices, headed "Attention, White League," and signed by an officer in his military capacity. Abney, the leader of the band at Coushatta, when he sent off the republican prisoners under a guard, gave a military order for supplies and guard to the highest officer of a club in another town, on obedience to which, if his story were true, the safety of the lives of the prisoners depended. Yet he professed to have no other power than that of president of an ordinary democratic club addressing the president of a subordinate or branch club of the same organization.

The White League of New Orleans itself was and is a constant menace to the republicans of the whole State. Its commander can in a few hours place bodies of men, armed and drilled, in any of the near parishes, or those on the coast, or into Mississippi, Alabama, or Texas. It doubtless contains many persons of property and influence. It also contains many persons of very different character. It would be desirous and able to overthrow the State government at any time, if not prevented by the power of the United States. They still retain more than one thousand stand of arms, taken from the State on September 14, and never returned.

We cannot doubt that the effect of all these things was to prevent a full, free, and fair election, and to intimidate the colored voters and the white republicans. The very formation of a white man's party was a menace of terrible import to those who remembered Colfax and Bossier and the convention. The press was filled with threats of violence. The agreement to discharge laborers, the suggestion that wild beasts are tamed by hunger, was evidence of the same spirit. The overthrow of the State government by the White League on the 14th of September, the turning out large numbers of parish officials in the country, compelling them to flee for their lives; the fearful lesson of Coushatta, the formation, arming, and drilling of the White League, the natural successors of the Knights of the White Camellia—these things in a community where there is no legal punishment for political murder must, in the nature of things, have filled with terror a people timid and gentle like the colored population of Louisiana, even if we had not taken abundant evidence as to special acts of violence and crime and their effects on particular neighborhoods.

Mr. Moncure, the conservative candidate for State treasurer, claims a majority in the whole State of about 5,000. A far greater number of republicans than enough to overcome this majority must have been prevented from registration or driven by terror from the polls.

In view of these facts, we do not hesitate to find that the election of 1874 was neither full, free, nor fair; that in large portions of the State the usual means of instructing and persuading the people, of organizing and conducting a campaign, could not be carried on by republicans without danger to their lives; and that many more voters than were needed to give the republican party a complete victory were prevented from voting at all or coerced into voting the white man's ticket.

It was to declare the result of such an election that the returning board met at New Orleans in 1874. In expressing our dissent from the view they took of their own powers and duties, and our emphatic disapprobation of their proceedings, we desire to state as emphatically our unwillingness to do them any injustice, and our full appreciation of all the considerations which may tend to palliate their conduct. Several of them have held high position. Governor Wells, the president, had been a large and wealthy planter before the war, had remained loyal through the rebellion, had been true to the flag of his country when driven to the swamps and hunted with dogs. Such a record entitles him to our warmest sympathy and respect.

But we must declare the law and the fact as we find it.

The Louisiana election laws provide the following machinery for elections:

First. A registration of the voters, to be completed ten days before the election, by a supervisor to be appointed in each parish by the governor.

Second. The fixing in each parish suitable polling places by a police jury chosen by the people of the parish.

Third. Three commissioners of elections, appointed by the police juries, to preside at each poll.

Fourth. A returning board of five persons appointed by the governor, to whom the returns from the whole State are made by the local officers, and who are to canvass and compile them and promulgate the result.

Section 44, statute 1872, provides for the organization of the Legislature, as follows:

[Extract.]

"SEC. 44. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to transmit to the clerk of the house of representatives and the secretary of the senate of the last General Assembly a list of the names of such persons as, according to the returns, shall have been elected to either branch of the General Assembly; and it shall be the duty of the said clerk and secretary to place the names of the representatives and senators-elect so furnished upon the roll of the house and of the senate, respectively; and those representatives and senators whose names are so placed by the clerk and secretary, respectively, in accordance with the foregoing provisions, and none other, shall be competent to organize the house of representatives or senate. Nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with article 34 of the constitution of the State."

The authority given to this board is only to canvass and compile the returns, making two copies, and "of one copy of which they are to make public proclamation, declaring the names of all persons voted for, the number of votes for each, and the names of the persons who have been duly and lawfully elected."

Sections 3 and 26 are as follows:

"SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That in such canvass and compilation the returning officers shall observe the following order: They shall compile first the statements from all polls or voting places at which there shall have been a fair, free, and peaceable registration and election. Whenever, from any poll or voting place, there shall be received the statement of any supervisor of registration or commissioner of election, in form as required by section 26 of this act, on affidavit of three or more citizens, of any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences, which prevented or tended to prevent a fair, free, and peaceable vote of all qualified electors entitled to vote at such poll or voting place, such returning officers shall not canvass, count, or compile the statement of votes from such poll or voting place until the statements from all other polls or voting places shall have been canvassed and compiled. The returning officers shall then proceed to investigate the statements of riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences at any such poll or voting place; and if from the evidence of such statement they shall be convinced that such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences did not materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll or voting place, or did not prevent a sufficient number of qualified voters thereat from registering or voting to materially change the result of the election, then, and not otherwise, said returning officers shall canvass and compile the vote of such poll or voting place with those previously canvassed and compiled; but if said returning officers shall not be fully satisfied thereof, it shall be their duty to examine further testimony in regard thereto, and to this end they shall have power to send for persons and papers. If, after such examination, the said returning officers shall be convinced that said riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences did materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll or voting place, or did prevent a sufficient number of the qualified electors thereat from registering and voting to materially change the result of the election, then the said returning officers shall not canvass or compile the statement of the votes of such poll or voting place, but shall exclude it from their returns: Provided, That any person interested in said election by reason of being a candidate for office shall be allowed a hearing before said returning officers upon making application within the time allowed for the forwarding of the returns of said election."

"SEC. 26. Be it further enacted, &c., That in any parish, precinct, ward, city, or town in which during the time of registration or revision of registration, or on any day of election, there shall be any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences, at any place within said parish, or at or near any poll or voting place, or place of registration or revision of registration, which riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences shall prevent, or tend to prevent, a fair, free, peaceable, and full vote of all the qualified electors of said parish, precinct, ward, city, or town, it shall be the duty of the commissioners of election, if such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences occur on the day of election, or of the supervision of registration of the parish, if they occur during the time of registration or revision of registration, to make in duplicate and under oath a clear and full statement of all the facts relating thereto and of the effect produced by such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbances, bribery, or corrupt influences in preventing a fair, free, peaceable, and full registration or election, and of the number of qualified voters deterred by such riots, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences from registering or voting, which statement shall also be corroborated under oath by three respectable citizens, qualified electors of the parish. When such statement is made by a commissioner of election or a supervisor of registration, he shall forward it in duplicate to the supervisor of registration of the parish, if in the city of New Orleans to the secretary of state, one copy of which, if made to the supervisor of registration, shall be forwarded by him to the returning officers provided for in section 2 of this act, when he makes the returns of election in his parish. His copy of said statement shall be so annexed to his returns of elections, by paste, wax, or some adhesive substance, that the same can be kept together, and the other copy the supervisor of registration shall deliver to the clerk of the court of his parish for the use of the district attorney."

Upon this statute we are all clearly of opinion that the returning board had no right to do anything except to canvass and compile the returns which were lawfully made to them by the local officers, except in cases where they were accompanied by the certificates of the supervisor or commissioner provided in the third section. In such cases the last sentence of that section shows that it was expected that they would ordinarily exercise the grave and delicate duty of investigating charges of riot, tumult, bribery, or corruption on a hearing of the parties interested in the office. It never could have been meant that this board, of its own notion, sitting in New Orleans, at a distance from the place of voting, and without notice, could decide the right of persons claiming to be elected.

The board took a different view of its powers, and proceeded to throw out the votes from many polls where they found intimidation and violence to have existed. The result was to defeat persons whom, on the returns, they should have declared elected, and to elect persons who should not have been declared elected. In regard to four parishes they declared no result whatever, but referred the matter to the Legislature.

The result of this action was to change the political majority of the persons who, by the constitution and laws of Louisiana are entitled to organize the house of representatives.

The returning board claims that in this proceeding they acted under an honest belief that they were right in their construction of the law, and that they were giving effect to the true will of a majority of the people of Louisiana, and that in their construction they followed the precedent set by the democratic or fusion returning board of 1872. We believe they did follow such a precedent. We have no doubt that they believed they were defending the people of Louisiana against a fraud on their constitutional rights. But there is no more dangerous form of self-delusion than that which induces men in high places of public trust to violate law to redress or prevent what they deem public wrongs.

We are not prepared to declare without further examination how many persons obtained a prima facie title to seats in the Legislature through this wrongful action. In some of the cases there were defects either of form or substance in the returns themselves which the board claimed required their rejection without regard to the evidence of intimidation.

But the method adopted to set right this wrong was totally objectionable. When the Legislature assembled on the 4th of January, 1875, the minority of the persons entitled to organize the house repaired to the State-house, prepared to possess themselves of the organization by force. Numbers of persons prominent in the White League were on hand to assist. Even long ladders were provided, in readiness for the entry of accomplices from without, who would, in all probability, after the seizure of the house, have displaced the existing senate, and put in its place the other body claiming to be the rightful senate. When the clerk of the last house began to call the roll, one of the minority moved that Mr. Wiltz be declared speaker, and the motion was declared carried by the person who made it—it was not in fact carried, but was opposed by a majority. Thereupon Mr. Wiltz took the gavel. A motion was made to seat five members from the four vacant parishes, which he declared carried, though it was not carried, but was opposed by a majority. He then declared a Mr. Flood elected sergeant-at-arms, who appointed a number of deputies, who at once appeared with badges on which were printed "assistant sergeant-at-arms." Simultaneously a large number of persons in the crowd in the street outside the State-house exhibited the same badges. There being symptoms of violence and disorder, a committee requested General De Trobriand, a military officer of the United States, to aid in preserving order. He came into the hall, spoke to the persons in the lobby at the desire of Wiltz, and order was restored. Subsequently, at the request of the majority of the persons entitled to organize the body and of the governor of the State, General De Trobriand caused his soldiers to remove the five persons who had been forced into seats as above. Wiltz and his friends then, after protest, withdrew, and the majority remained and organized the house by the choice of Mr. Hahn as speaker, and remains now in session as the house of representatives of Louisiana.

We do not here express a judgment of the lawfulness of the act of the military officer. We believe his interference alone prevented a scene of bloodshed like that which attended the convention of 1866, and the scenes of September 14, 1874. His act was not an interference with an organized legislative body. It was a body which had been declared organized by one man contrary to the truth, and contrary to the protest of a majority of its members. It was in no sense a legislative body, but was an illegal assembly, attempting to thrust out the legal house from its place and to usurp its functions. The fact that it was composed in part of a minority of those entitled to seats did not alter its character, nor did the fact, if it be true, that the five members ought to have been declared entitled to seats by the returning board, alter the character of the proceeding. A contestant is not entitled to seat himself in a legislative body by force, however just may be his claim to his seat. Nor is a minority of such a body entitled to seat him by force against the will of the majority.

The law of Louisiana provides various processes and safeguards for conducting elections and determining who are chosen to the Legislature: First, supervisors to make the registration; second, commissioners to preside and conduct elections, and receive only registered votes, and report it through the supervisors; third, returning board to canvass and compile statements of local officers, with judicial powers in certain cases, where local officers certify there was illegality affecting the result; fourth, those persons who are declared elected by the returning board, and those only who may organize the houses; fifth, the house so organized, who are to take up each contested seat, case by case, and determine as final judges who is entitled to it.

Persons who are not declared elected by the returning board have no more right to force themselves in to take part in organizing that house, a minority of those holding such certificates have no more right to organize it over the majority, or to force others in, merely because they claim that they ought to have been declared elected, than persons who claim that the house did wrong in judging of their cases have a right to force themselves in, or than persons who claim that supervisors defeated their election by wrong-doing in registration, or commissioners did wrong in conducting or certifying the election. The act of each set of officers in the successive steps, right or wrong, is binding until the next tribunal has reversed or corrected its action. When, therefore, the minority of those borne on the secretary's roll undertook to overcome the majority in organizing the house, they were wrong-doers. When the five members were brought in they were brought in not by the house but by wrong-doers overthrowing the will of the house and prepared and able to support their wrong by force. When the military officer removed them he removed at the request of the true majority of the assembly persons who were interfering with their right and duty to organize the same under the constitution and laws of Louisiana. Whether the officer had warrant for his action or not, he was interfering not against but in aid of a legislative body at its own request, and at the request of the governor of the State; and his interference prevented a scene of blood which the previous and recent history of that State warrants us in believing would have been of the most fearful character.

We should be extremely glad if any method we could devise or suggest would correct the wrong that we think has been done in organizing the house of representatives. But this must be accomplished, if at all, by the concerted action of those persons in Louisiana of both parties who sincerely desire peace and order and do not wish their State to suffer, to advance the schemes of designing politicians.

We do not overlook the causes which tend to excite deep feelings of discontent in the white native population of Louisiana. There has been great maladministration; public funds have been wasted, public credit impaired, and taxation is heavy. These facts combine with the general prostration of business through the country and with the diversion of business from New Orleans by reason of the construction of railroads northerly from Texas to create gloom and discontent.

But the ballot, not violence or assassination, is the peaceful remedy for so much of these evils as is due to the State administration. Every national administration, nearly every State and city administration, has been charged by its opponents with like faults. We have not been able to investigate all the charges which have been made against the State administration, although we have received both documentary and oral evidence on the subject. So far as has appeared to us, Governor Kellogg is chargeable with no dishonesty, and has set himself as faithfully as he could to remedy the great evil bequeathed to him by his predecessor.

Charges of corruption are made by the conservatives against republican officials without the slightest discrimination. They assume that the acceptance of office is a badge of fraud. No matter how high the position hitherto occupied socially, how spotless the reputation, the moment of acceptance of office witnesses an entire reverse. The gentleman suddenly becomes a blackguard, the honest man a thief. Four or five cases of alleged defalcation were clearly shown to be a mistake during our session. That there was great wrong and corruption, that much bad legislation was enacted, that grievous monopolies were created during Governor Warmoth's term of office is undeniable. That the democrats purchased him at the earliest possible moment for the purpose of converting to their own use his powers of corruption, his skill and cunning in manipulating the machinery of election, was asserted by some of their own witnesses. That there has been decided improvement under Governor Kellogg all admit.

It is said that large numbers of the white people of Louisiana believe that Governor Kellogg is a usurper, and, acting on that belief, are prepared and able to drive him from power if not prevented by the National Government. This may be true. But it is equally true that as large numbers of the voters of Louisiana believe Kellogg and his associates to have been lawfully elected, and that if McEnery were established in power he would be a usurper. The difference between the two parties being that the latter do not propose to settle questions of law by bloodshed. It is further said that this is a question which concerns the people of Louisiana alone, and that they should be left to fight out the question among themselves. But this is an erroneous view, both of the rights and duties of the people of the United States under the Constitution. They have an interest in the question whether Senators and Representatives for Louisiana, thrust into their seats by illegal means, shall sit in Congress to make laws for them, and whether electors, gaining their office in like manner, shall turn the scale in the choice of a President of the United States. The President and Congress are bound to recognize, and if need be to support the true government of Louisiana against all usurpers; and the American people will abandon their rights and flinch from the performance of their duties when they leave these questions to be settled either by the mob or the assassin.

We are of opinion that the union of nearly all the blacks in one political party, and of nearly all the whites in another, is a fact deeply to be deplored. Party spirit bears evil fruit in abundance when animosities of race and class do not mingle with it. But we cannot doubt that whether the white republican leaders have sought to foster this discussion on the color line or not, it would long since have disappeared if the leaders of the white people of Louisiana had not hammered and welded together the masses of the colored population by a system of conduct calculated to excite in the highest degree their fears for their freedom or their political and social rights.

The people who would persuade us and to some degree persuade themselves that they are willing to give the negro all his rights under the Constitution seem to lose all their understanding of what justice and equality really mean when the negro is concerned. They think, and very justly, that it is a great evil to mass all the colored votes on one side. It never occurs to them that it is an equal evil to mass all the white votes on the other. On the contrary, their animosity is specially directed against those whites who act with negroes. They have little reprobation for those leaders who advise the whites to band together in an agreement not to employ negro laborers who vote the radical ticket, or for the planters who followed the advice. The life of no man would be safe, as one of their witnesses very frankly admitted, who, when it was time to gather the cotton crop, should advise negroes to refuse to work for planters who are not republicans. The white who kills a negro goes unpunished. A fearful vengeance overtakes the negro who snaps a cap at a white man. In parish after parish the whites turn out public officers whom they dislike by force, and no punishment follows. The assembling of a body of negroes at the command of the sheriff to maintain his lawful authority is followed by the Colfax massacre.

In addition to the testimony taken in public hearings, your committee enjoyed much opportunity of conversing in private with the people of New Orleans and with persons from other parts of Louisiana. The conservatives, as they called themselves, gentlemen of culture and refinement, courteously extended to the committee offers of the elegant hospitality for which their city is famed. They were all deeply excited by the political condition, and made it the constant topic of their discourse. They were unanimous in declaring that the people of their State desired nothing but peace and good government; that they were willing to leave the colored man undisturbed in his new constitutional rights; and that it was their desire and their interests that the laborer and the employer should live together in confidence and amity. They declared that no honest republican would be affected in his social or personal relation by his political opinions. On the other hand, men in great numbers sought private interviews with the republican members of the committee to declare that a reign of terror existed worse than existed during the war; that they did not dare to express openly republican sentiments; that destruction to their business and risk to their lives would result. These men were, some of them, known to members of the committee. They were not politicians, held and desired no office, and were in many cases business men of high standing and character. They urged the committee not to require them to testify, saying they did not dare to risk the consequences.

The American people are now brought face to face with this condition of things. In the State of Louisiana there is a governor in office who owes his seat to the interference of the the national power, which has recognized his title to his office, not by reason of any ascertainment of the facts by legal process, but has based its action solely on the illegal order of a judge. In the same State there is a Legislature, one branch of which derives its authority partly from the same order, the other being organized by a majority who have been established in power by another interference of the National Government, and which majority derives its title, not from any legal ascertainment of the facts, but from the certificates of a returning board which has misconceived and exceeded its legal authority. It is not strange that the republicans of Louisiana should delude themselves by any plausible views of laws which will enable them to occupy the places which they believe the will of a majority of the legal voters of the State, if free from violence and intimidation, would award to them. It is not strange that the democrats of Louisiana should believe the whole State government a usurpation, should give it no credit for its best acts, should seek to embarrass and thwart and resist it to the extent of their power, and should be unwilling to wait for the slow but sure operation of lawful remedies to cure whatever evil really belongs to it.

ELECTION OF 1872.

We were unable to make any direct and thorough investigation of the election of 1872. It is apparent from the facts stated in the report of the Senate committee (Senate Report, third session Forty-second Congress, No. 457) that the action of the officials was so tainted with fraud and illegality that the action of neither of the pretended returning boards or the certificates of the local election officers can be relied on in the least as a basis for making up an opinion as to the true result. Indeed, this is conceded by several of the most intelligent of the conservative witnesses. It would be impossible at this distance of time, and probably at any time, to go behind the returns and ascertain the true expression of the people's will. But our best judgment is that Governor Kellogg was elected. We find that many of the more moderate of his opponents concede his election. There is no argument to show the election of McEnery which is not met by one equally strong in proof of the election of Kellogg. The registration shows a considerable majority of colored voters, and it is not denied that Kellogg received substantially all the colored votes, besides some thousand whites. Taking the democratic returns in 1872 for all the parishes, except four, for which the returns are conceded to be forgeries, and six others from which they threw out the returns for fraud and violence, and get at the true vote in those parishes in any way you can, by comparing the vote with the registration of white and colored voters, or by taking the republican and democratic votes at the election of this year, and it gives Kellogg a majority of several thousand. Besides, Kellogg is now in office. The frauds, which make it impossible to ascertain in any better or more satisfactory mode the true will of the people, were perpetrated by the appointees of Warmoth in the interest of McEnery.

On the other hand, the order of Judge Durell and the so-called canvass made by the returning board in the interest of Kellogg seem to us to have no validity and to be entitled to no respect whatever. We concede and declare, as emphatically as any person can desire, the unsatisfactory character of the methods above adopted for arriving at this conclusion. There is, in our judgment, whatever may be the opinion one may form from the statement of men familiar with the campaign of 1872, or from the registration of white and colored voters, no legal evidence whatever which will warrant the declaration that either Kellogg or McEnery was lawfully elected.

We have devoted much anxious reflection to the question of remedy for these evils. It is a question in deciding which no person in Louisiana, on either side, has offered us any valuable suggestion. The remedy, in great degree, lies out of the range of our powers. This great movement of the public mind in great States is not to be dealt with as if it were a street riot. You cannot change great currents of public sentiment or the habits of thought and feeling of great bodies of men by act of Congress. In a republic you cannot long or permanently check their manifestation by the exercise of national power. Until the great body of the white people of Louisiana shall learn to obey the law, to submit to the Constitution, to respect labor, to base their institutions on liberty, equality, and justice, they can enjoy neither prosperity nor peace. The history of their State must be made up of exhibitions of tumult, violence, and crime, alternating with extraordinary exertions of national authority to repress them. Between the two everything that makes a people prosperous, happy, or honorable must go to decay. If the whites of Louisiana, with all their superiority of intelligence, spirit, and energy, choose this course, their right to do so is "safe from all enactments human."

The public sentiment of the rest of the country, more potent than any legislation, might stop the whole trouble in a month. If, instead of seeking to gain partisan advantage from evils which are ruining this fair State, the two parties of the North would each resolutely set its face against the evil done by its own side, little would remain for Congress or President. The difficulty of the southern problem would have disappeared long ago if the democratic party of the North had given it to be clearly understood that they would have no political association with men who would commit, tolerate, extenuate, or overlook murder, and the republican party of the North had been unanimous in making it understood with equal emphasis that they would have no affiliation with men who would plunder the public for personal gain.

But to apply such immediate remedies as are in our power is not a matter of expediency but of constitutional duty.

The United States must guarantee a republican form of government to every State. The National Government must determine whom it will recognize and support as the lawful government in any State. Congress must, by appropriate legislation, if necessary, enforce the last three articles of amendment to the Constitution. Every power lodged in Congress or the President must be exerted, if necessary, to secure national elections against violence. Whether these powers should be used when the exigency calls for them is a question which was settled when the people of the United States conferred them.

The first need of Louisiana is to know who should be treated as the lawful governor until the end of the term which will expire in 1876. It has been suggested that there should be a new election under the authority of Congress. This is not desired, so far as we learn, by any considerable number of persons in Louisiana. Its legality is doubtful. The authority of the person chosen would be denied quite as strenuously as that of Governor Kellogg. Without the presence of United States troops we do not believe a fair election could be had. In the presence of troops we believe the democrats would refuse to take part. It would be a great calamity to Louisiana to excite at this time the violence and bitterness which an election contest would kindle. A government so elected would be in substance only a provisional government. The only alternative seems to be to recognize one or the other of the claimants to the office of governor.

Kellogg is now in fact in office. The President has recognized him, and states to Congress that from the best information he can obtain he believes him to have been elected. The Kellogg government is a fact; its legality is sustained by the judicial tribunals of the State; it is in active operation in all its departments. Under it the late State election has been held, and on its certificates must depend, prima facie, the right to their seats of the Representatives chosen from Louisiana for the next Congress. The McEnery government exists only on paper. Its recognition would create the most perplexing questions as to the legality of all public proceedings had in Louisiana for two years past. The recognition of Kellogg by the House will give peace and quiet to Louisiana until the next election.

Some of us are inclined further to recommend additional legislation to protect the peaceable citizens of Louisiana in the freedom of elections, and in the rights declared by the constitutional amendment. The law passed at the short session of 1871, designed to suppress the acts known as the Ku-Klux outrages, was adopted with great hesitation, and was denounced in some quarters as dangerous to the liberties of the people. Yet it proved an effective remedy, powerful for good, but harmless for ill, and commanded the general approval of the country.

We feel as deeply as anybody the objection to suspending the writ of habeas corpus, even for a limited time, or for special emergencies, or for a limited extent of territory. But when every other legal safeguard is overthrown; when to peaceable, honest, law-abiding men is neither freedom of election, of speech, of the press, of action, or of opinion; when there is no legal redress for injuries or legal punishment for murder, it is but a mockery to leave this writ to be used only as an instrument to enable wrong-doers to escape punishment for their crimes. So much of the statute of 1871 as authorized the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus in certain cases has expired by its own limitation. Some of us believe that it will be necessary to re-enact those sections with some modifications, and with careful restriction of time and occasion. We do not include any recommendation on that subject in this report.

On the whole case we are of opinion—

First. That there has been and is on the part of the party calling themselves the white men's party in Louisiana a purpose to take possession by force and fraud of the State government, without regard to the question of who may have the numerical majority at a fair election.

Second. That in the execution of this purpose they have refrained, and will refrain, from the use of no instruments which they think designed to accomplish it, whether those instruments be murder, fraud, civil war, or coercion of laborers by employers.

Third. While there are many men in their party of more moderate views, who do not themselves use or approve these unlawful means, such men desire the accomplishment of the same end, and are powerless to restrain their more violent associates.

Fourth. Three causes have made it easier to unite so large a number of the whites of Louisiana in these purposes, and have rendered more difficult to unite the best men among them in opposition:

The fact that the administration party of Louisiana is made up by massing together almost the whole negro vote with a few whites, largely from other States;

The fact that there has been great maladministration by republican officials;

The belief, honestly entertained by large numbers of the white people of Louisiana, that they have been twice defrauded of the results of elections in which they had been successful.

Fifth. While all these things are great evils, much to be deplored and likely to exasperate any people, the course of the whites themselves has tended to bring them about and to inflame them. The simple and peaceful remedies of obedience to law, argument, decent treatment of their opponents, would, if they had pursued them, have proved effectual long ago.

Sixth. While we believe Governor Kellogg to have received a majority of the votes in 1873, and while we believe there were violence and fraud which frustrated the will of the people in many parishes in 1874, the illegal order of Judge Durell, and the illegal conduct of the returning board in attempting to cure one wrong by another, naturally inflamed the popular discontent and lent plausibility to the complaints.

Seventh. There has been much dishonesty, much corruption, in State and local administration in Louisiana. For this the republicans, especially under Warmoth's rule, are largely responsible, although in numerous instances their opponents have been equally to blame.

Eighth. The effect of all this has been to put an end to the authority of law, and in a large portion of Louisiana to deprive the negro of his freedom of suffrage, and wholly to destroy the value of the methods provided by law for securing fairness in elections or ascertaining their result. This state of things overthrows republican government in Louisiana and seriously menaces it in the whole country.

Ninth. A new election held at this time under national authority is not desirable. It is not wished for by either side, and would inflame and aggravate the evils now existing.

Tenth. It is the duty of Congress to use such powers as are vested in it by the Constitution. It should recognize the lawful governor of Louisiana by express resolution. We think William Pitt Kellogg the choice of a majority of the voters of Louisiana, and that he should be recognized accordingly. It should provide further safeguards for holding elections and ascertaining the result, if any can be devised.

Eleventh. But these remedies are at best temporary and superficial, curing the symptoms, not the disease. Efficient aid to the State to establish public education would have gone far to prevent the evil, and may yet do much to effect a cure. The public sentiment of the rest of the country, without distinction of party, may do much to remove, as it has already unfortunately done much to aggravate, the evil in Louisiana. That people should be made to understand that all the authority lodged in the National Government to preserve republican government and to protect the rights of all its citizens will be kindly but fearlessly and steadily exerted, and that no party in this country will accept the alliance of men who are seeking power by such methods as we have been compelled to describe. Unless this can be done the free institutions of the whole United States will not long survive the destruction of those in the South.

Mr. DAWES. Pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole I move that all debate upon the pending section of the bill be terminated in fifteen minutes.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I ask the Chair what is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. If the House shall not go into Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill the regular order will be the consideration of the joint resolution from the Committee on Elections relating to a constitutional amendment.

Mr. COBURN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. It is whether or not that is a subject on which the Committee on Elections are privileged to report at any time, or whether that committee is not confined to reporting upon contested-election cases, and not upon general measures in relation to election laws?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] states, and the Chair thinks he is correct in that statement, that a resolution was adopted in December last upon motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHITE] giving the committee the right to report at any time upon this subject.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I have just brought from the Clerk's office and laid before the Speaker the resolution of the House authorizing us to report at any time upon this subject. I desire to say a single word further. I think I am authorized to say that the Committee on Elections will not consume over an hour and a half and probably not over an hour and a quarter in the discussion of this measure. While these other measures for the purpose of running the Government are measures of importance, it is of equal or higher importance that we should examine whether we are going to have any government to run.

Mr. RANDALL. We had better get the money for the running of the Government any way.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. There is no measure before the House of equal importance to, and demanding immediate action so much as, the measure we have reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the exact attitude of the business of the House, so that each gentleman will comprehend his right in the premises. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] has made his report, but it has not yet been considered, and it is competent to raise upon it the question of consideration. The gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN,] who rises to report from a committee authorized to report at any time, of course will have to raise that question of consideration before he can submit his report. And pending his attempt to obtain the floor, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] moves to suspend the rules that the House may go into Committee of the Whole on the revenue bill. That motion to suspend the rules necessarily takes precedence.

Mr. DAWES. I want the question first put upon the motion to terminate debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit that question. Gentlemen will observe that the majority of the House can control the business of the House.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. If this motion to limit debate upon the sixth section shall be agreed to, will that limitation apply to new sections that may be offered?

The SPEAKER. It will apply to the whole bill.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire to offer a new section in relation to the income tax, and I wish the House to understand that that is an important matter and should be debated at some length.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the motion to limit debate upon the sixth section of the bill to fifteen minutes.

Mr. SENER. I move to amend that motion so as to allow one hour's debate.

Many MEMBERS. O, no.

Mr. DAWES. I will compromise with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SENER] on thirty minutes.

Several MEMBERS. O, no; one hour.

Mr. DAWES. Well, if one hour is the general understanding, I will agree to that.

The question was taken upon limiting debate to one hour; and it was agreed to upon a division—ayes 104, noes 46.

The question was upon the motion to go into Committee of the Whole upon the tax and tariff bill.

AFFAIRS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. COBURN. Before that question is submitted, I ask unanimous consent to make another privileged report from the Committee on Alabama Affairs, a general report, which I ask to have printed and recommitted.

Mr. RANDALL. Not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. CALDWELL. And to be accompanied by no bill.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask consent to submit on behalf of the minority their views, and that they be printed with the views of the majority.

No objection was made, and the majority and minority reports were ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. COBURN. In addition to that, I ask that the testimony taken by the committee be also printed.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

COMMISSIONER OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. PLATT, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4836) defining the duties of the Commissioner of Customs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DONNAN. I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the tax and tariff bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve my right to object until the report is read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the business of the House gets inextricably tangled by stopping a motion to suspend the rules by every form of report. The Chair will submit the question upon going into Committee of the Whole upon the tax and tariff bill.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 108, noes 49.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Ought not these reports of surveys to be ordered to be printed?

The SPEAKER. If they be ordered to be printed they will not reach the committees this session. The printing office is very much overtaxed; and therefore the Chair has omitted the usual order for printing, presuming that the committees desired to use the documents.

Mr. CONGER. The committee have acted on most of these cases upon special information from the Department.

The SPEAKER. Then there would seem to be still less reason for the printing. The Chair took the hint from the gentleman himself last week.

Mr. CONGER. At that time we were using these documents.

CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a statement in connection with the bill passed yesterday from the Committee on War Claims.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. LAWRENCE. I present the following statement in relation to the bill (H. R. No. 4692) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of March 3, 1871, which passed the House on the 22d February:

The number of cases in last report of commissioners of claims is twenty-four hundred and seven. Of this number twelve hundred and forty-four are wholly disallowed, and eleven hundred and sixty-three are allowed in whole or in part. The amount allowed by the commissioners is $740,409.72, and the amount disallowed is $4,471,995.09.

These allowances are divided among the eleven States of which the commissioners have jurisdiction, as follows:

Alabama.....	$71,671 82
Arkansas.....	96,501 00
Florida.....	13,475 00
Georgia.....	42,535 86
Louisiana.....	95,737 00
Mississippi.....	143,128 00
North Carolina.....	35,889 57
South Carolina.....	5,930 25
Tennessee.....	87,400 80
Texas.....	1,300 00
Virginia.....	138,145 42
West Virginia.....	8,695 00

Total.....$750,409 72

The Committee on War Claims reviewed and examined all the cases reported where the allowance exceeded $2,000, and have made changes in two cases only; in one, being the claim of John and Parmilla R. Rhodes, reducing the allowance $2,000; and in the other, increasing it $386.67.

Four cases were added by the committee; one of $5,165 reported favorably in the first report of the commissioners but suspended for further examination; one reported favorably in second report for $150, and omitted from bill by error; and two reported disallowed, loyalty of claimants not proven before commissioners, namely, case of Hon. JAMES C. FREEMAN, a member of this House from Georgia, and case of Joseph Garland, of Alabama. Additional evidence submitted to the committee satisfied it on that point, and these cases, FREEMAN's for $2,985 and Garland's for $1,200, are included in the bill.

The amount appropriated by the bill as reported by the committee is $748,296.39, and is divided among eleven hundred and sixty-seven claimants, the allowance to each being an average of $641.21, and is distributed as follows among the eleven States:

States.	Number of cases.	Amount.
Alabama.....	142	$72,871 82
Arkansas.....	153	96,501 00
Florida.....	6	13,475 00
Georgia.....	107	45,520 86
Louisiana.....	14	93,737 00
Mississippi.....	75	143,128 00
North Carolina.....	117	35,889 57
South Carolina.....		5,930 25
Tennessee.....		87,787 47
Texas.....		1,300 00
Virginia.....		143,460 42
West Virginia.....		8,695 00
Total.....		748,296 39

There is one claim in favor of Horace B. and John C. Tebbetts, of Louisiana, for $34,760, which I did not think fully supported by evidence in all respects, but the committee, after examination, were satisfied with it, and so it is recommended for payment.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. HALE, of Maine, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4630) to protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the increase of duties provided by this act shall not apply to any goods, wares, or merchandise actually on shipboard and bound to the United States on the 10th day of February, 1875, nor on any such goods, wares, or merchandise on deposit in warehouses or public stores at the date of the passage of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment moved by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] to that section; which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That it shall be shown, by testimony under oath, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, that such goods, wares, and merchandise were by contract sold to be delivered in future, at a fixed price, which contract was in writing prior to the 10th day of February, 1875.

Mr. EAMES. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia will not be adopted. The provision contained in section 6 as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means is in my judgment eminently just so far as all these interests are concerned. It will be remembered by the House that this bill was reported on the 10th day of February last, and this was the first information to the country of the changes proposed by the bill. This section as reported provides that all merchandise imported from foreign countries affected by the bill actually on shipboard or in the public stores at the time the bill was reported shall not be subjected to the increased duty.

I desire on behalf of one interest with which I happen to be more familiar with than others to state how this will operate if the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] is adopted, or in case section 6 should be stricken from the bill. There is in this country a very large interest engaged in the manufacture of woollens. The establishments engaged in this manufacture number 3,454. There is a capital invested in this industry amounting to $132,000,000. The wages that are paid are upward of $40,000,000 annually, and the number of hands employed is over 120,000. These are the figures according to the last census of the United States. This is one of the great interests of the country that are affected by the provisions of this section, and it is of the utmost importance, Mr. Chairman, that the provisions of this section should be preserved in order that these interests may be protected. There is no gentleman upon this floor who has a woolen-mill in his district but knows that this industry is more depressed perhaps than any other great industry in the country. Since the close of the war it has been almost impossible for these mills to run so as to make both ends meet. And especially in the past two years everybody who knows anything about this industry knows it has been depressed to that extent that nearly half the machinery is stopped and half of the laborers heretofore employed thrown out of employment.

Now, in connection with this provision I desire to call the attention of members of this House to this fact. Very many of these mills make contracts in advance for their products. In order to do this it is a matter of necessity on their part that they should estimate at the time these contracts are made what is to be the cost of the material, what is to be the price of the labor, what is to be the cost of everything that enters into the cloth as it comes from the loom. In order to do this if a contract was made by one of these mill operators on the 10th of February, 1875, when this bill was reported and when its provisions were first known to the country, it is necessary that he should ascertain at that time the cost of the raw material that enters into the product and contract for its purchase. There is used in the manufacture of all the finer woolen goods what is known as the Australian wool, and if a contract is made at a fixed date for the product of a mill for three months in advance, the operator of the mill is obliged on that day to make provision for the purchase of his wool abroad in order to be able to meet the contract.

I hope the provision contained in this section will not be altered at all. It is no more than just, no more than right that he who has made his contracts at the time this bill was reported should be able to avail himself of its provisions so that he may be able to meet his contracts made for the future product of his mill at the stipulated price.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] reminds me that in reference to this matter I am not speaking merely for an industry simply in my own district, but for this great woolen industry throughout this whole country. It is not an interest limited to the New England States, but these woolen-mills are to be found also in New York, in Pennsylvania, in Ohio, in Indiana, and in all the great Western States which make the great middle belt of our country, and this industry includes, as I have said, a capital of something like $132,000,000, and gives employment to over 120,000 laborers.

I hope this amendment will not be adopted, and that the section as reported by the committee will stand as part of the bill.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Chairman, that old saying, "politics makes strange bedfellows," was never better proven than it has been in the debate upon this bill.

First we have the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] a democrat, advocating the passage of this bill because it increases the tariff upon iron, steel, and glass, and is therefore a benefit to his immediate constituents; while another leading democrat from Pennsylvania tells us "the ruin that now prevails in Pennsylvania is owing to the high tariff, by which you have overstimulated production until pig-iron and railroad-iron are piled up mountain high, and for which there is no market."

The honest and able republican from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] who has always been in favor of protection to American industry, opposes this bill because it enacts so much unjust and unequal taxation and because it is oppressive upon the whole people; while another distinguished Pennsylvania republican advocates the passage of the bill, and tells us "a revenue bill is necessarily a compromise bill." I think that a good definition of this bill. It is a compromise, and I think about the meanest compromise that was ever presented to Congress to be enacted into a law.

It is a compromise between the Pennsylvania iron interests, the New England cotton and woolen manufacturers, and the importers of foreign goods. The two former get the 10 per cent. additional protection; while the importer pockets the 10 per cent. increased value of all the goods he has on hand and all he has purchased coming over. Add to these the whisky ring that has bought (to be delivered hereafter) the whisky now in bond, and we have the four high contracting parties to this compromise. There are millions in it for these four classes. And this is the protection which has its advocates upon this floor on this afternoon of the nineteenth century; a protection that does not protect, but a protection which enriches the few at the expense of the many—a protection which makes the rich richer and the poor poorer.

The honorable chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in advocating the right of the importer to have his stock on hand and on shipboard coming over exempt from the increased duties provided for in this bill, said:

Here is a man who buys in a foreign market and puts the ocean between him and the man he bought of so he cannot take it back.

Sir, if this is a good excuse for not increasing the tax upon the goods of the importer on hand, then surely we ought not to increase the tax upon manufactured whisky which has already paid one tax, and especially upon whisky in bond which is held in bond upon a written agreement that it shall pay a tax of 70 cents and taken out of bond within one year. If the Government expects dealers to obey the law and pay the tax, then the Government should keep faith with the dealers and distillers. The contract fixing the amount of tax and manner of payment should be as binding upon the Government as it is upon the manufacturers, and as faithfully performed by the one as by the other.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was before the House the other day, my bucolic friend from the agricultural regions of Wall street and parts adjacent, where they raise bulls and bears and various other kinds of agricultural cattle, and which agricultural region he so well represents, took occasion to congratulate himself that he had been enabled to buy his suit of garments from one of Queen Victoria's subjects for twenty-one dollars. My friend from Michigan [Mr. FIELD] congratulated himself also that the raw materials of all his garments had been raised by American farmers and the garments bought of American manufacturers—price not stated.

I want to show, in the few moments allotted to me, the difference between the principles of these two gentlemen. My friend from New York [Mr. Cox] in making his purchase threw his money into the laps of the subjects of Queen Victoria, never, perchance, to return again to us. My agricultural friend from Michigan [Mr. FIELD] gave his money to the citizens of the United States, and instead of handing it to the wool-growers and manufacturers of the British nation, gave it to the wool-growers of Michigan; to the woolen manufacturers of Pennsylvania; to the cotton manufacturers of Massachusetts; to the button-makers of Connecticut, and to the silk manufacturers of New Jersey. When the free-trader has used up his garments, he has nothing to leave to the Republic but a few rags for the paper manufacturer. But when the gentleman from Michigan, a protectionist, has used up his clothes he has an equal amount of fragments and rags to leave to the paper-maker, but in addition to that he has left to the American people the amount of the cost of his garments to go into the circulating medium of the country.

The one gives away the life-blood of American commerce to be used by the subjects of Her Majesty Queen Victoria and leaves his country poorer therefore; the other keeps that life-blood in the country to be used at home by its citizens to assist in the domestic exchanges and to encourage and vivify American industry. The one encourages the pauper labor of foreigners in Her Majesty's dominions; the other gives effectual aid in their labors to the citizens of the Union, the subjects of our good old Uncle Samuel. The actions of my two friends form a practical exhibition of the difference in value to the country between the principles of free trade and protection.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be allowed to go on. I could not get the drift of his argument, and I never could answer that speech in the world.

Mr. SYPHER. The object of the pending bill, as I understand it, is to create an amount of revenue sufficient to meet the deficiency in the revenue receipts. There is no additional amount of money required by the Treasury, according to the statement of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, but the falling off of the receipts, caused no doubt by the general depression of the business interest of the country, demands this legislation. There does not seem to be any protective feature in the bill; it is purely and simply a measure for revenue. In view of this character of the measure, I have listened with some surprise and regret at the course of the discussion in this House for several days.

The whisky and tobacco interests have been defended with great vigor, and the champions of these interests have at the same time made fierce attacks upon other interests in other sections of the country. Other gentlemen have availed themselves of this occasion to express their views on the general principles of tariff and free trade, and have exhibited a spirit of sectionalism always to be deprecated in matters of this kind, which is of national concern and importance. New England has been berated and severely criticised on account of the defense of her manufacturing interests by her Representatives on this floor.

It occurs to me that the West and the South may find profit in studying the history of New England and following her example. Forty years ago, when her people were engaged in commerce and ship-building, her Representatives were not required to defend the principles of protective tariff; but when these pursuits became unprofitable her people directed their energies into other channels; and against a rigorous climate and a sterile country, against heavy bills of freight and insurance for raw material, and against a distant market for her manufactured goods, she has built up a magnificent system of manufactures, making her independent of protective legislation and "tariff tinkering."

Let the West and South profit by this example. In the South we have great manufacturing resources. Besides an abundance of raw material, our deposits of coal and iron, emery ore, sulphur, and salt are unsurpassed, and our water-power is equal to that of any other section of the country. Again, a mild and salubrious climate, congenial to the inhabitants of the world, invites capital and skilled labor from every quarter of the globe.

Diversified industry is the solution to the southern question which now vexes the brain of so many of the statesmen of the present day. Let the furnace fires be lighted from Virginia to Missouri; let the clatter of the cotton-mill make music for the people of the cotton States, while Louisiana makes sugar to sweeten your free tea and coffee, or, if your tastes prefer it, the whisky of the gentlemen from Kentucky and Ohio.

The former policy of the South of feeding slaves on cheap western provisions to make more cotton was abolished when the emancipation proclamation was issued. She now desires the development of her great resources, the inauguration of a system of diversified industry, the construction of her levees, the protection of her sugar interests, and the opening of the mouth of the Mississippi River.

Before taking my seat I must notice some remarks made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] the Cuban patriot, who represents a free-trade constituency. He has upon other occasions made smart speeches in favor of Cuban liberty and of recognizing the belligerent rights of the Cuban patriots. But in this discussion he advocates and supports the policy of paying that effete Spanish slave-power for sugar $90,000,000 of American gold annually to crush out all opposition to that insolent despotism. Cuban patriots of the character of the distinguished gentleman from New York ought to be in better business, and lend some of his energy and brilliant wit in supporting the interests of the poor sugar planters of Louisiana, and at the same time the true interests of the whole country.

Now, a word to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] who represents the Vincennes district. I regretted to hear him speak unkindly of the sugar interests. He is an amiable man, of "mild temper;" and as our people purchase from his constituents much of their corn, pork, hay, stock, and many other articles, it seems as if the gentleman was endeavoring to destroy the market for the products of his own district. Is not the gentleman trying to "kill the goose that lays the golden egg?"

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

The amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. DURHAM. I renew the amendment for the purpose of saying a few words, although it is utterly impossible for a man to make himself understood upon a question of this sort within five minutes. But I desire to present one view in regard to this matter that has not been presented by any gentleman on this floor.

This bill is based upon the idea that it is necessary for us to raise this thirty-odd million dollars for the purpose of creating what is known as the sinking fund. If the argument of my colleague [Mr. BRICK] and of some other gentlemen on this floor be true, that more than 1 per cent. of our national debt has already been paid to these bondholders, then I suggest that it is unfair to the present population of the United States with its present wealth to impose this additional burden upon them before the debt is due and before it is demanded.

I may illustrate my argument in this way: I think that every man ought to provide for the payment of his debts. But no man is legally bound to pay his debts until they become due. Consequently, if I am worth to-day only $500, and by the increase of my capital may be worth $10,000 a year from this time, I would be in a far better condition to pay my debts one year from now than I am now.

In 1860 the wealth of the United States was estimated at $16,000,000,000, with a population of about twenty-eight millions. After a decade, coming down to 1870, what was the change so far as the population and wealth of the United States were concerned? Our wealth had run up to the enormous sum of $30,000,000,000, and the population to about forty or forty-two millions. Now, I put the question to this House, that unless it be necessary that this debt should be paid or, in other words, suppose that we were placed back to 1860, how much harder would it have been for a population of twenty-eight millions to pay this debt upon a wealth of $16,000,000,000 than it is for forty-two millions to pay it upon a wealth of $30,000,000,000?

Unless there is a pressing demand that this money shall be paid, or, in other words, if we have already paid 1 per cent. to the sinking fund, and are unquestionably not behind in meeting the obligations of the Government to these bondholders, then I believe that at the end of this decade, and before these bonds become due, the population of the United States may be 50,000,000 with a wealth of $50,000,000,000. Then how much easier it would be to raise this money upon that population and wealth than it is now with the population and wealth which we have at this time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire to say—

Mr. DAWES. I rise to oppose the amendment. I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] wishes to offer an amendment.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire to oppose the pending amendment. We propose by this bill to raise about $36,000,000.

Mr. BURCHARD. About $41,000,000.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. As I understand, about $36,000,000 to be raised from the labor and industry of the country. In the first place, through the tariff section it will come from the tariff upon articles used by the common people of the country. Whisky and tobacco are used by the mass of the people.

Now, I am in favor of striking out this section and compelling the wealthy people of the country to contribute their quota of this additional taxation, by imposing a tax upon incomes. In the years 1868-'69 we raised through the income tax $34,000,000. That money came from the wealth of the rich—from full hands and full treasuries. But we have voted here to require a tax from empty hands and empty treasuries. I say it would be a disgrace to this Congress to impose this additional taxation upon the labor, the industry of the country, and allow the wealth of the nation to escape.

I understand that the income tax was established in England in 1798, during the wars with Napoleon, and was continued until after the close of that struggle. In 1842 it was re-enacted, and has been continued to the present time. If in a country like England the wealth and luxury of the nation are compelled to contribute their share of taxation, most certainly in this democratic country of ours we can afford to impose such a tax. To burden with taxation the labor, the industry of the country, and allow its wealth to go free, would be an outrage upon justice. Our income tax ought never to have been repealed.

Therefore I think we ought to strike out these sections and re-enact the income tax, so that the rich may contribute their share of these increased burdens which we are compelled to put upon the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate upon the pending amendment, which is to strike out the last word, has been exhausted.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.
Mr. STORM. I move to amend by inserting the following as an additional proviso:

And provided further, That on and after the 1st day of July next emery ore shall be placed on the free list, and no further import duties shall be collected on the same.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a point of order. I submit that this amendment is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STORM. I should like to know on what principle? I suppose it is because the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has a mine of emery ore in his district. Will the amendment be in order at any stage of the bill?

Mr. DAWES. It will be in order when we get through this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the information of members who have amendments to offer in the nature of substitutes for the whole bill or as additional sections, that none of them will be in order till the committee has passed from the consideration of the section now under consideration.

Mr. DAWES. Let us have a vote on section 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] to add to section 6 the proviso which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, It shall be shown by testimony under oath to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that such goods, wares, and merchandise were by contract sold to be delivered in future at a fixed price, which contract was in writing prior to the 10th day of February, 1875.

The question being taken, the amendment was not agreed to; there were ayes 43, noes not counted.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move to amend by adding to the sixth section the following:

Provided, That nothing in the fifth section of this act shall apply to or affect the duties upon clothing or Australian wools.

Mr. DAWES. I submit that that amendment is out of order.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is not out of order, because this section, as well as the fifth section, applies to woolen goods.

Mr. DAWES. It may be in order; but I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. KELLOGG. I offer this amendment for the benefit of the woolen interest at home as well as the woolen manufacturers. As I stated the other day, the duties are now over 50 per cent.—20 per cent. higher than on any other staple production or class of goods. It actually costs—

Mr. O'NEILL. Why does not the gentleman make the amendment apply to all woolen goods?

Mr. KELLOGG. I cannot permit myself to be interrupted in a five-minutes speech. It actually costs more—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet ruled upon the point of order which was raised before the gentleman began to speak. As the amendment relates to section 5, and as the committee is now considering section 6, the Chair rules that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. KELLOGG. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means conceded that it was in order, because both sections relate to this duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ruling for the Chair, and not for the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. The amendment is out of order.

Mr. KELLOGG. I thought that if the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means conceded the amendment to be in order, the Chair would allow a vote to be taken upon it.

Mr. DAWES. Before gentlemen proceed to offer their separate sections, I desire to submit an amendment to construe a portion of the tariff provisions that passed the other day. In endeavoring to prevent frauds we made the phraseology a little too stringent with reference to bolting-cloths (which heretofore have been free) and also with regard to the pass-books which servant girls may take to savings-banks.

I want to have a section put in that tariff bill so it shall not be construed to apply to them; that is all.

Mr. BECK. I move to amend the section offered by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DAWES. I offered it for that purpose only, in order to exclude savings-banks pass-books from stamps, and bolting-cloths from the operation of that tariff bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts offer the amendment as an amendment to section 6, which the committee is now considering?

Mr. DAWES. I supposed that section 6 was passed.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not passed, as no vote has yet been taken on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] to strike it out.

Mr. DAWES. I beg pardon. I thought it had been voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. After that vote has been taken it will be open to an amendment moving a separate section, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has indicated.

The question recurred on Mr. FORT's motion to strike out section 6. The Committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 77.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. DAWES. I now offer as an additional section the following.
The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That nothing contained in the act entitled "An act to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes," approved February 8, 1875, shall be construed to impose any duty on bolting-cloths heretofore admitted free of duty, nor to require the use of a stamp upon the receipt-book of a savings-bank or institutions of savings having no capital stock and doing no other business than receiving deposits to be loaned or invested for the sole benefit of the parties making such deposits, without profit or compensation to the association or company, when money is paid to a depositor on his pass-book.

Mr. BECK. I move to amend that.

Mr. FORT. We ought to have some explanation first of the proposition moved by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. If it is necessary, I will now make an explanation for the reason of the amendment I have offered.

Mr. BECK. Let me offer mine as an amendment to the gentleman's amendment, and then the gentleman can speak to both, as they are in the same line.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

Mr. BECK. I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the first section of the act approved February 8, 1875, entitled "An act to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes," be amended by striking out of the proviso at the end of said section the words "in value," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "in quantity;" And provided further, That said section shall not be so construed as to impose a duty on bolting-cloths, which are hereby restored to the free list.

Mr. BECK. I move to strike out the latter part of that amendment, as it is included in the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word.

Mr. FORT. I should like to know why bolting-cloths should be placed on the free list?

Mr. BECK. They have always been put upon the free list.

Mr. DAWES. They have always been on the free list, and it is not the intention of the committee nor anybody else that I can hear of, excepting in reference to tea and coffee, to place anything now free upon the dutiable list. What may be done in reference to tea and coffee is another thing.

Bolting-cloths are made of silk, and the phraseology of the little tariff bill includes them in the dutiable list and makes them pay 60 cents. The object of my amendment is to make them free as heretofore.

In order to save pass-books of depositors in savings-banks and like institutions from being compelled to use stamps, it is also necessary to change the phraseology of the law. In the alteration made on the subject of check stamps in the little tariff bill, strange enough the Internal Revenue Bureau has construed it so as to make pass-books of depositors in savings-banks liable to be stamped every time. Such was not the intention of anybody. That, however, is the present construction, and this is to remedy it.

Now, sir, my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] wants to amend that amendment in another vital point; that is to say, a piece of silk that has more in quantity though not in value of something else in it shall be cut down 20 per cent. in duty. Take a piece of silk which you can put, the whole of it, in your hand, and put a little bit of cotton or wool in it that does not cost one-hundredth part as much as silk, but which in quantity is a good deal more than the silk; for instance, put a little shoddy in it which in quantity is as much again as of silk, and he wants, because that shoddy is in it, that it shall come in paying 10 per cent. less duty. Now there must be some line of distinction drawn.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. W. R. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise so much with the view of influencing the action of the House on this bill, as in order to set myself and the constituency I represent on this floor right before the country. I had no intention of addressing the committee upon it at all until within the last few moments. But I am now satisfied that it is a duty I owe, both to myself and my constituency, that I should express my views and theirs.

I believe, sir, in calling things honestly by their honest names. I believe in calling free trade "free trade;" and I believe that trade when it is free is absolutely free without restrictions of all kinds whatsoever. Sir, I have never been in that sense a free-trader. I am not one to-day, and I do not ever expect to be in this sense, a free-trader so long as I live under the flag of my adopted country. I am not a free-trader as free trade is proclaimed on the stump by demagogues, and there is no man in this House to-day who could go before a constituency, an intelligent constituency of this country, and declare that he is in favor of absolute and entire free trade and be elected to a position on this floor.

Why, sir, what would be the result of such a state of things? How would we provide for the vast outlay, some three hundred millions a year, which the country has to meet? How would it be met if we had absolute free trade? By internal taxation; by raising taxes from the industries and the products of the country. And how would we raise them when there would be no industries in the country, and when all would be swept away by this so-called free trade, and our mechanics and laboring men were left to starve and rot in our streets; while the mechanics and laboring men of a competing nation like Great Britain would be flourishing in affluence, in luxury, and wealth at our expense?

I believe in a tariff for revenue, an honest tariff for revenue, which while it protects the industries of this country will at the same time enable the Government to meet its obligations. And when we are told that Great Britain sets us an example of great prosperity because it is in favor of and practices free trade, why those who say so forget that until the last few years Great Britain was one of the first nations on the earth that protected every single article and every single interest of its own manufacturers. Even the farmers, until a late day, were protected by a tax on foreign corn. And if to-day they have free trade it is because they have robbed the nations of their wealth, and that wealth they have brought into their own homes to lend it to their manufacturers at a low rate of interest, starving the masses of their own people in order to have cheap and abundant labor.

Let any man to-day read the history of the working classes of Great Britain honestly and truly, and what conclusion would he come to but that the moneyed aristocracy of that country was oppressing the vast masses of the poor; and they will do the same for our toiling millions if we give them the opportunity.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FIELD. The remarks of the gentleman are very interesting, and I hope he will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. W. R. ROBERTS. Just one word more. If I went before my constituents after having boasted on this floor like one of my colleagues [Mr. COX] that I went abroad to buy my clothes from foreign tailors they would spurn me, and I would deserve it.

Mr. BECK and Mr. MAYNARD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BECK. I desire to speak to my amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. If a further amendment be in order, I will move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky by striking out the word "quantity."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is in the second degree, and is not amendable.

Mr. MAYNARD. May I be permitted to ask the gentleman to withdraw his amendment that I may renew it?

Mr. BECK. I do not desire to withdraw it. I presume I have the right to be heard on my own amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Kentucky to seek the floor for that purpose, and recognized other gentlemen. The amendment has been spoken to and opposed in five-minutes speeches, and debate on it is exhausted.

Mr. BECK. When the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] offered the additional section, I offered my amendment at the same time so that he might speak to both and that I might be heard afterward in support of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky undoubtedly had the floor when he offered his amendment, but the Chair understood him to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts. But as the gentleman has not spoken on his amendment, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. BECK. I am obliged to the Chair. I approve of the provision of the section offered by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, which provides that bolting-cloths shall be free. They were on the free list, and the construction put upon the little tariff bill by the Treasury Department was not intended either by the House or by the committee, and therefore they ought to be restored to the position they occupied before that construction was given.

I further agree that in savings-banks without capital, carried on simply for the benefit of depositors, we ought to allow those depositors to draw out money with their pass-books; there ought not to be any check-stamp put upon them. To that I agree.

But I must insist that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means does not state my position correctly in regard to the striking out of the words "in value" and inserting in their place the words "in quantity" in the first section of that bill as applied to mixed-silk goods. Prior to the passage of that law mixed-silk goods came in at a duty of 50 per cent., while goods strictly of silk paid a duty of 60 per cent. Complaints were made to the committee that frauds were being perpetrated by putting in threads of cotton and of wool and other material, to make what were really silk goods mixed goods, and so to evade the law. Thereupon the Committee on Ways and Means thought, and the House agreed, that we should prevent that evasion, and require 25 per cent. of the materials to be other than silk, in order that the goods might be recognized as mixed goods. That was the meaning of the bill as it passed the House beyond question. When it got to the Senate the silk manufacturers rallied and put in "25 per cent. in value." What was the effect of that? Cotton is worth say 20 cents a pound; raw silk is worth $5 a pound; and mixed goods containing 75 or 80 per cent. of cotton were raised to 60 per cent. instead of 50 per cent., as heretofore; while goods all cotton are at 35 per cent. ad valorem, so that it operated to the exclusion of that class of goods.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, which is an amendment in the second degree.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his amendment and I will renew it.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CESSNA. I object. We will never get through in that way. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. I ask for a division on it. There is $5,000,000 of revenue involved.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 56, noes 81.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HATHORN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the section these words:

That on all imported natural mineral waters there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following rates of duty, namely:

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman's amendment is not in order in connection with my amendment. I ask that my amendment be first decided.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of order on the amendment?

Mr. DAWES. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. COX. Is it in order to move to strike out the proviso?

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SENER. I rise to address the Chair upon the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. SENER. Then I move to strike out the last word. I rise at this late period of this discussion, not because I suppose I can enlighten or convince the House by what I shall say. I had no expectation of speaking on this amendment, and would not do so if there was any other way in which I could say what I wish in reference to the feature of this bill increasing the tax on tobacco; but since there will be no such opportunity, I desire to express my opposition to that feature of this bill to which I have alluded. I want to enter here my protest against any increase of the tobacco tax. It may be and is of course a "thrice-told tale;" but it is a fact which is before the House and the country that a larger revenue has been realized from this tax at a low rate than from one at a higher rate, as is proposed by this bill; and especially do I so speak since incomes are not taxed. I feel it my duty as one member of this House, and a Representative in part of the people of Virginia, to express the opposition of the people of that State, expressed individually, expressed collectively, expressed through their boards of trade and by the resolutions of their General Assembly read at your Clerk's desk yesterday against the feature in this tariff bill increasing the tax on tobacco.

It is the duty of the Representatives of the people, I concede, to vote supplies. It is their duty, their bounden duty, whether they come from that section, the South, that I come from, or come from the country north of us, to vote sufficient money to pay the public debt and to carry on this Government; but it is not their duty to put an excessive tax upon one subject of taxation and no tax on another. The theory of our Government is that it rests like the dome of heaven, equally on all and unequally on none. Why put oppressive taxation upon late slaves in the South who raise tobacco, while you leave untaxed those who inhabit the populous cities, who have grown rich in the last fifteen years, and who ought to be willing equally to pay an income tax on their vast interest-bearing subjects, so as to add to the revenues of the Government? Since it is alleged that more revenue is needed, leave tobacco as it is by the present law, though that I believe is too high, and if necessary to raise revenue put back the income tax. I will vote for an amendment to impose an income tax, and I would offer such a proposition myself did I not know that my friend from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] has a carefully drawn amendment looking to that object, which he has given notice of a purpose to offer as soon as he can get the floor.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I oppose the amendment, and ask a vote upon it.

Mr. COX. I desire to oppose the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I have done it for you.

Mr. COX. I have but one word to say.

Mr. DAWES. Well, I will yield my time to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that members on this side of the House when they spoke of free trade have not been understood as meaning absolute free trade. Now, any one who attends the sessions of the House and listens to its proceedings must know that nobody means absolute free trade, regardless of Government restrictions or taxation. The "free-trader" favors restriction so far as revenue is concerned; no more and no less. But, sir, because I gave an illustration in reference to my clothes, I am to be arraigned by somebody or by nobody.

Now, sir, let me say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOWNSEND] who spoke so kindly in reply to my remarks on clothing, that all those employed in the United States in the manufacture of textiles—cotton, flax, and linen goods, carpets, woolen, and worsted goods—are 243,731, and the production $380,913,815; and in articles of wear, including the clothing for all persons, boots and shoes, hats and caps, collars, gloves, &c., number 297,141, and the production $398,264,118; while the vast consumers of the country amount to 41,000,000 persons, representing every other branch of industry. The people, sir, are entitled to cheap clothing. I am no demagogue when I advocate that every man, woman, and child in the country shall have cheap clothing; and when I go to Montreal in Canada and find an Irish Fenian tailor there and have my clothes made there at half-price, I am still endeavoring to illustrate the same privilege and liberty of trade. When this is understood in the proper light, how do I by favoring the largest interchange in the interest of the poor and laborious violate the laws of nature, science, morality, the Constitution, or the divine government of the Almighty?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATHORN. I move as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] the additional section which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That on all imported natural mineral waters there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following rate of duty, namely: for each bottle or jug containing not more than one quart, 3 cents, and in addition thereto, 25 per cent. ad valorem; containing more than one quart, 3 cents for each additional quart or fractional part thereof, and in addition thereto, 25 per cent. ad valorem; otherwise than in bottles, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. HATHORN. This additional section which I have offered is worthy of the favorable consideration of this House. In my opinion there is no line of business in this country which is so injuriously and unjustly affected by our present tariff laws as the business of the American mineral springs. The general policy of the framers of our tariff laws has been to foster and encourage American manufactures, to enable American industries to compete successfully with their foreign rivals in the markets of this country. But for the last two years this branch of business has been made an exception to this general rule. In respect to this industry there has been a different policy. It would seem to be the purpose of the present laws to drive the American mineral springs from the markets of this country and to give the whole field over to their foreign rivals, the mineral springs of Germany and France. Since 1872 all foreign natural mineral waters have been admitted entirely free of duty to this country, and not only the waters themselves, but also the boxes, bottles, cork, wires; in short, the whole package has been entirely exempt from duty. This policy has been more favorable to the foreign mineral spring than a policy of complete free trade would have been. Under a free-trade policy the springs of this country could compete in price both at home and abroad. But as the tariff now stands the foreign waters not only have all the benefits of a free-trade policy in being admitted entirely free of duty into this country, but also have the provisions of the present protective tariff apply to the American mineral springs; and as they are prevented thereby from being able to compete in price with their foreign rivals, the foreign mineral waters are given under the present tariff almost freedom from competition with their American rivals within the United States. What more could they desire? But if the American mineral springs are to have equal privileges in this country with the springs of Germany and France, a change must be made in the present law, and the section which I have offered adopted and incorporated in this bill.

This section proposes to restore the same rate of duty upon imported natural mineral waters which existed previous to the passage of the act of June 6, 1872. That act placed foreign mineral waters on the free list for the first time since the year 1846. They have now been on the free list since August, 1872. Not only are the waters themselves permitted to be entered free of duty, but also the bottles, corks, wire, boxes; in short, the whole package is entirely exempt from duty.

Since foreign mineral waters were placed upon the free list, which occurred on the 1st of August, 1872, the importations of these waters has very largely increased. For instance, during the two years 1871 and 1872, when duties were levied upon foreign waters, the importation amounted to about 1,000 gallons; but during the years 1873 and 1874, since these waters have been upon the free list, there have been imported over 600,000 gallons. In this manner the mineral springs of Germany and France have been brought into competition with the mineral springs of the United States, underselling them in every city and State of the Union.

The American mineral springs are now unable to put their bottled waters into the market either at home or abroad at prices to compete with their foreign rivals. Why? Solely on account of the present tariff laws of this country. Certainly not on account of the first cost of the water itself, for that is as free by nature in this country as in France or Germany. The cost of placing the waters in the market is the cost of the materials necessary to contain the water, namely: The bottles, corks, wire, boxes, the cost of the necessary labor, of the capital for the necessary buildings, and for conducting the business. All these materials and articles of cost are very much higher in this country than in Germany or France. Why? On account of the present tariff laws. There is a duty on these materials of from 30 to 40 per cent. in gold, and they cannot be supplied to the American mineral springs from the cheaper markets abroad unless these duties are paid, nor can they be obtained in our home markets except at prices much higher on account of the duties. For this reason the American mineral springs are virtually excluded from sale of their waters in foreign markets, and while foreign waters are admitted entirely free in this country, they will soon be driven from their own home markets under the present law. If the springs of this country were located in Germany, where they could buy in cheaper foreign markets the materials they need, the present tariff laws of the United States would not then prevent them from successfully competing in the markets of this country with the waters of Germany and France; but as they are permanently located here, they cannot compete in price under the present tariff unless the duties upon foreign waters should be restored. The cheap manufacture of German jugs, bottles, &c., and their cheap labor, enable the German waters to be sent here and sold at prices which are ruinous to the business in this country. The cheap prices in foreign countries of all those things which enter into the cost of sending these waters to market enables the foreign waters to undersell the American in this country.

The present law in its operation confers direct benefits and advantages upon foreigners in the sale of their bottle waters in the United States and works corresponding iniquity and injustice to American mineral springs, and offers freedom from competition and protection within the United States not to Americans but to foreigners. The capital invested in this business by our own citizens is considerable. It has at least not escaped taxation.

In Saratoga County there are more than twenty mineral springs owned by various corporations, companies, and individuals, some of which have investments of from $10,000 to $1,000,000, and there are numbers in other States. This business has been crippled and injured in the past two years by the unequal competition of the foreign waters which have been introduced into this country as the result of the unfair advantage given to them in the repeal of the customs duties an advantage which they did not possess before since 1846. Justice to them demands that the duty should be restored. Other interests are protected in this country. This business is as emphatically one for protection as any other. Other products of foreign manufacture are subject to heavy duties. There is no reason why this industry should be singled out from all others for destruction. There is capital invested in it and laborers engaged in the business, and also in the manufacture of the bottles, corks, boxes, and other materials used in the business. It is a business which is beneficial to the country and it deserves protection. If placed upon an equal footing by the restoration of the duty, the character and the reputation of the American mineral waters are such that they will have no reason to fear and never will suffer from competition with foreign waters in this country.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say one or two words in regard to this bill, not perhaps in technical opposition to this amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HATHORN.] There are some things which should be amended in our tariff law which are not included in this bill. An amendment will be offered, but there will be no opportunity to speak to it, putting gilling-twine, net-twine, on the free list. I wish to take this opportunity to say in advance in regard to that amendment that the twine used by our fishermen all along the coasts of the lakes and on the rivers of this country, all the twine which is valuable for use in the water is made abroad and imported into this country, paying a duty of 6 per centum ad valorem.

By the treaty of Washington and the laws following it Canadian fishermen are permitted to bring their catches of fish into the United States free of duty—all the fish which they catch in the lakes and on our northwestern frontier. The Canadian fisherman can get up his outfit of boats and twine at less than half the expense which the American fisherman has to bear, and yet by the treaty of Washington and the laws that followed it the Canadian fisherman can come right into our markets with his fish free of duty and compete with the American fisherman, who has had to pay an extravagant duty on the very material which he uses to capture the fish. When that amendment is offered I trust the House will agree to it, for there is scarcely a single State in the Union that is not interested in having this gilling-twine, which is made in foreign countries and which is not made of good quality in the United States, placed upon the free list. This twine is not used for any other purpose except as gilling or net twine.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon this bill is closed.

Mr. HATHORN. I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is upon the additional section offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, [Mr. DAWES.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I offer as additional sections that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The clerk read as follows:

SEC. — That there shall be levied, collected, and paid annually, upon the annual gains, profits, or income of every person residing in the United States, whether derived from any kind of property, rents, interests, dividends, salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, except as hereinafter mentioned, if such annual gains, profits, or income exceed the sum of $3,000 and do not exceed the sum of $10,000, a duty of 3 per cent. upon the amount thereof exceeding $3,000; and if said income exceeds the sum of $10,000, a duty of 5 per cent. upon the amount thereof exceeding $3,000. And upon the annual gains, profits, or income, rents, and dividends accruing upon any property, securities, and stocks owned in the United States by any citizen of the United States residing abroad, except as hereinafter mentioned, and not in the employ of the Government of the United States, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 5 per cent.: Provided, That incomes derived from interest upon notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, and also all premiums on gold and coupons, shall be included in estimating incomes under this act: And provided further, That the word person in this section shall be construed to include corporations.

SEC. — That all the provisions of law in force on the 30th day of June, 1870, relating to deductions from incomes and relating to the assessment and collection of income tax are hereby revived and declared to be in force.

Mr. SPEER. I wish to inquire of the Chair if the order of the House limiting debate to one hour upon the last section of this bill applies to all the new sections that may be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. It applies to the remainder of the bill; that is a question which has been many times ruled upon.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. If the income tax is to be revived, it is necessary to have officers to assess it. I therefore move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] by adding the provision which I send to the desk.

Mr. HOSKINS. It is well enough for the House to understand that if the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa prevails it will revive fifteen hundred Government officers to act as assessors, and will involve an additional expense of over a million and a half of dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That for the purpose of assessing and levying the said income tax the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an assessor for each collection district in the United States, and each assessor shall divide his district into a convenient number of assessment districts, which may be changed as often as may be deemed necessary, subject to such regulations and limitations as may be imposed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, within each of which the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever there shall be a vacancy, shall appoint one or more assistant assessors who shall be a resident of such assessment district; and in case of a vacancy occurring in the office of assessor by reason of death or any other cause, the assistant assessor of the assessment district in which the assessor resided at the time of the vacancy occurring shall act as assessor until an appointment filling the vacancy shall be made. And the pay of these officers shall be as provided for the same officers by the laws of June 30, 1864, and July 13, 1866.

Mr. FORT. Before this amendment is voted on, I wish to offer an amendment to perfect the original section.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] is in the nature of an amendment perfecting that of the gentleman of Iowa, [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE.]

Mr. RANDALL. Is the amendment germane?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] is germane to that of the gentleman from Iowa. The latter amendment proposes to impose an income tax; and the proposition of the gentleman from New York is to create officers to enforce the collection of that tax. The Chair holds that the amendment is germane.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS, there were—ayes 60, noes 71; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS and Mr. LOUGHRIDGE were appointed.

Mr. FORT. Before the vote is taken, I would like to have my amendment read. It provides that the collectors shall do this assessment.

A MEMBER. They cannot.

Mr. FORT. Yes, they can; they attend now to the business of assessments.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 99.

So the amendment of Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS was not agreed to.

Mr. FORT. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That all the duties performed by revenue assessors shall hereafter be performed by collectors of internal revenue, subject to such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FORT; there were—ayes 43, noes 79; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FORT and Mr. LOUGHRIDGE were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 77.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That after the passage of this act no person shall be appointed or employed to collect the revenues of any State or Territory who shall not at the time of appointment be a citizen of said State or Territory.

Mr. DAWES. I raise the question whether that amendment is germane.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Well, then, I will offer it as a separate section.

Mr. FIELD. I offer the following amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE:]

SEC. 7. That from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties now imposed in Schedule K, section 2504 of the Revised Statutes, on the articles herein after enumerated, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say:

On sawed boards, plank, deals, and other lumber of hemlock, whitewood, sycamore, and basswood, $2 per thousand feet board measure; all other varieties of sawed lumber, $4 per thousand feet board measure.

Mr. BURCHARD. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to that of the gentleman from Iowa, which relates to the income tax and to internal revenue, while this proposes to amend the tariff laws.

Mr. FIELD. This is offered as a substitute. I propose to raise revenue from something else and to get it from foreigners and strangers instead of our own people.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Committee of the Whole is now considering the subject of the income tax, and all amendments must be germane to that subject.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I offer the following amendment as a proviso to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa:

Provided, That the tax hereby imposed upon incomes, so far as derived from all stocks or interest in joint-stock companies, all interest paid on mortgages, bonds, notes, or from any form of invested capital, shall be paid to the several collectors of internal revenue respectively by the person who shall pay or be bound or obliged to pay such dividends or interest; and the amount so paid shall be deducted from the interest and dividends payable on such invested capital.

Mr. DAWES. That is an assault upon contracts, which is new.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir, it is very old; and it is not an assault upon contracts.

Several members objected to debate.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 80, noes 66.

The question then recurred on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. LOUGHRIDGE as amended.

Mr. HOSKINS. If this amendment is adopted, it kills the bill.

Several members objected to debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon this question the Chair will direct that the vote be taken by tellers. He appoints the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE.]

Mr. HOSKINS. I desire—

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is about dividing.

Mr. SPEER. This amendment is utterly absurd.

Mr. HOSKINS. The division has not yet taken place; and I have an amendment—

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I object to bankers standing around here interrupting the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 114, noes 86.

So the amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. COX. Is it in order to move now to add an additional section to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out the enacting clause is neither amendable nor debatable.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the enacting clause will not be stricken out.

Mr. KELLOGG. No debate is in order. If the gentleman from Massachusetts is heard I want to be heard in reply.

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing is in order but the vote on the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. FIELD. I wish to submit an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is not in order.

Mr. DAWES. I appeal to the gentleman from Connecticut not to make that motion.

Mr. KELLOGG. I feel it to be my duty to insist upon it.

Mr. DAWES. Let it come from some other quarter.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. If this motion is agreed to, what then will be the condition of the bill?

Mr. DAWES. It will leave it like a hen with its head cut off.

Mr. KELLOGG. When the head is cut off we can put another better head on it; and that is my object.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. If the House should disagree to the motion to strike out the enacting clause, what then becomes of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. If the motion to strike out the enacting clause is carried in committee and on vote in the House should be rejected, then the committee resumes its session and the bill remains in the same condition it was before the motion to strike out the enacting clause was made.

Mr. CONGER. If this motion is not carried will the bill be open to an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 87, noes 98.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio, and Mr. KELLOGG were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 102, noes 113.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. COTTON. I move the following as an additional section:

That from and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid on tea and coffee imported from foreign countries the following duties: on each pound of tea 10 cents; and on each pound of coffee 2 cents.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 113.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COTTON. I should like to print some statements in regard to tea and coffee to show that there is not that supply in the country which has been stated.

Mr. FIELD. I object; debate is not in order.

Mr. COX. I move the following as an additional section:

SEC. 8. That the duty shall be changed from the present assessment, ad valorem, to a specific rate of not more than 1 cent per pound on all grades and descriptions of steel.

The committee divided; and there were ayes 16, noes not counted. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COX. I will postpone this matter till the next session.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I move the following to come in as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That after the passage of this act no person shall be appointed or employed to collect the revenues from the people of any section or territory who shall not at the time of appointment be a citizen of said State or Territory.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 77.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, and Mr. MONROE were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 72.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATHORN. I move the following to come in as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

That on all imported natural mineral waters there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following rate of duty, namely: for each bottle or jug containing not more than one quart 3 cents, and in addition thereto 25 per cent. ad valorem; containing more than one quart, 3 cents for each additional quart or fractional part thereof, and in addition thereto 25 per cent. ad valorem; otherwise than in bottles, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. SPEER. Is that in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is an additional section.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 64.

Mr. DAWES demanded tellers.

Mr. STORM. If this is carried we might as well tax the atmosphere!

Mr. DAWES. It opens the door for everything.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPEER. I make the point of order that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HATHORN] is directly interested in the amendment, and therefore is not entitled to vote. I understand the amendment was carried only by a small vote.

Mr. DAWES. He is not interested in foreign waters.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been carried.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move the following to come in as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC.—. And be it further enacted, That there shall be levied and collected, in addition to the tax at present levied and collected on all national-bank notes issued, $\frac{1}{2}$ half of 1 per cent. per annum, which additional tax on such notes shall be levied and collected together with the tax now levied and collected, and there shall further be levied and collected 1-10 of 1 per cent. on all sales of gold or transfers of gold, gold certificates, or other evidence of such transfer.

Mr. DAWES. This is contraction, and will call in $300,000,000.

Mr. CESSNA. I ask for a division of the question.

Mr. DAWES. It is better to take it as a whole.

Mr. BUCKNER. I offer as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PHILLIPS] the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

That on and after the 1st day of July next there shall be levied and paid a tax on all sales of stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion, coin, and other securities at the rate of one-tenth of 1 per cent. on the amount of the sales thereof; and every person, firm, or corporation engaged in the business of selling stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion, coin, and other securities, either for their own account or for the account of others, shall keep a true and accurate record thereof, under oath, that the same is true and correct, to the collector of the district where such business is carried on, on or before the 1st and 15th days of each month; and the collector shall thereupon assess and collect a tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent. on the gross amount of such sales; and said list or return shall be made in such a manner and form as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The substitute for the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. DAWES. I call for a division. I shall be compelled to call for a division on all these amendments, because the tendency, and I am afraid the purpose, of them is to break the bill down.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 80, noes 59.

Mr. DAWES. I call for tellers. The whole effect—

Several MEMBERS. No debate.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES and Mr. BUCKNER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 105, noes 58.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the committee rise and report the bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Here the committee informally rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 51) in relation to civil-service examinations;

An act (H. R. No. 4669) to provide for the selection of grand and petit jurors in the District of Columbia; and

An act (H. R. No. 4677) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1876.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. DAWES. I insist on my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. DAWES. That the committee rise and report the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order while amendments are being offered.

Mr. DAWES. I thought the amendments were all in.

Mr. BASS. I offer the following as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gilling-twine, to be used for the manufacture and repair of fishermen's nets, may be withdrawn from bonded warehouses free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. FIELD. There can be no objection to that.

The question being taken, there were ayes 40, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON. I offer the following as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC.—. That so much of section 15 of the act entitled "An act to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes," approved February 8, 1875, as imposes a stamp tax in words following, to wit: "Bank-check, draft, order, or voucher for the payment of any sum of money whatsoever, drawn upon any bank, banker, or trust company, 2 cents," be, and the same is hereby, repealed, to take effect from and after the 1st day of July, 1875.

Mr. FIELD. There can be no objection to that.

Mr. DAWES. Yes; I suppose from bankers there is no objection to it.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were ayes 38, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I offer the following as an additional section to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

And on all cloth, rugs, robes, or blankets, of which hair is a component part, there shall be levied and paid the same amount of tax as on apparently similar goods made either of wool or cotton.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. The gentleman is wise, but his wisdom is half an hour too late.

The question being taken on Mr. DAWES's motion there were—ayes 95, noes 40.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was agreed to.

The committee then rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HALE, of Maine, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4680) to further protect the sinking fund and to provide for the exigencies of the Government, had struck out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means, with instructions to report the same back in a new form, with whisky hereafter to be made at 90 cents per gallon, with the section on tobacco, as amended, in the bill; with the section on sugar, as amended, in the bill; with the clause restoring the 10 per cent., and with the sixth section of course; and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Will not the gentleman include in his motion also the income clause?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. COX. I move to lay the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] rises to a point of order. He will state the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. My point of order is this: When the Committee of the Whole struck out the enacting clause of the bill and reported it back to the House, under parliamentary usage, does not the control of the bill pass into the hands of its opponents, instead of going back to the committee that reported it?

The SPEAKER. The control goes into the hands of the member who moved to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether, if this motion to recommit the bill with instructions be carried, and the bill be thereupon recommitted to the committee, and the instructions obeyed by the committee, and the bill again reported to the House from that committee in obedience to the instructions, the bill must not under the rule go back again to the Committee of the Whole, and all amendments be in order and the bill be in precisely the same parliamentary condition as now?

The SPEAKER. The rule in regard to striking out the enacting clause of the bill is simply as the gentleman has intimated. When the Committee of the Whole strikes out the enacting clause the bill is immediately reported back to the House, and the question then is will the House concur. If the House concurs, of course the bill is dead. If the House non-concurs it is ipso facto recommitted. But the rules provide that the bill may be referred either to a select or standing committee; but when reported back from such committee it must of course go to the Committee of the Whole, and will then be open to amendment.

Mr. DAWES. It will be open to amendment; but the instructions are to report it to the Committee of the Whole in this form and not in the old form.

The SPEAKER. It will be reported in the form ordered by the instructions; but it will be open to amendment in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX. Cannot I move to lay the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts on the table?

The SPEAKER. The rule does not permit that; but the end which the gentleman has in view can be attained without that motion.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. The Committee of the Whole put upon this bill a section taxing incomes. If this bill goes back to the committee, will that section be retained?

The SPEAKER. Not under these instructions; but the Committee of the Whole could amend the bill by putting it back again.

Mr. COX. Would it be in order to move to concur in the action of the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts must be first submitted. If that motion be voted down and the House concurs in the action of the Committee of the Whole, then the bill is dead; but if the House non-concurs in the action of the Committee of the Whole, then the bill is recommitted to the committee.

Mr. CESSNA. In order that I may vote intelligently, I desire to know from the gentleman from Massachusetts what he proposes to do in regard to the tax on whisky on hand in these instructions? The gentleman proposes to change the tax which was $1 in the bill to 90 cents. I ask him what he proposes to do on that subject?

Mr. DAWES. I propose, instead of the section in the bill, a tax of 90 cents upon whisky hereafter to be made.

Mr. CESSNA. That releases whisky on hand from taxation?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The gentleman from Massachusetts has, I think, learned the temper of the House. The Committee of the Whole has voted on four or five propositions, and they were adopted. Does the gentleman propose to omit part of those amendments? Does he intend to reverse the action of the committee in these instructions?

Mr. BURCHARD. I would like to have the gentleman from Massachusetts explain what he expects to gain. When the bill goes back into Committee of the Whole all these several amendments can be renewed, and two or three days more will be consumed in considering the bill, when there are appropriation bills awaiting action.

Mr. DAWES. If this matter is open to debate, I will answer the gentleman's question.

The SPEAKER. It is not open to debate except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I object, and call for the regular order. The question was on the motion of Mr. DAWES.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Is that motion amendable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. DAWES. I have demanded the previous question on the instructions.

Upon seconding the demand for the previous question, tellers were ordered; and Mr. SENER and Mr. MONROE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 104, noes 91.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] that he withdraw his motion and let the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means. He will get out of his trouble sooner in that way than in any other.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw the call for the previous question, and I also withdraw the motion to recommit with instructions.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House that the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rule of the two Houses be suspended for the residue of the present session.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 4335) in relation to the Quartermaster's Department, fixing its status, reducing its numbers, and regulating appointments and promotions therein.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, with amendments; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House of Representatives.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

Mr. COX. I move that the House concur in the action of the Committee of the Whole, and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. That is the question which the Chair must now submit to the House.

Mr. DAWES. I leave it to the House to take the responsibility of concurring in that motion, which will be the end of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the effect of the motion. If the House concurs in the motion adopted in Committee of the Whole to strike out the enacting clause of the bill, it kills the bill; if the House votes not to concur, it recommits the bill, leaving it precisely where it was when the committee rose.

Mr. CESSNA. With the amendments already adopted in?

The SPEAKER. With the amendments in.

Mr. DAWES. I leave it to the House to say whether they want such a bill as this providing for the necessities of the Treasury. If not, they will vote in favor of concurring in the action of the committee.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I desire to make a motion.

The SPEAKER. No motion is possible under the rules except the one now pending.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Is not a motion from some one else, similar to that made and withdrawn by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] in order at this time?

Mr. COX. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the pending question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] would have the right to call the previous question upon concurring or non-concurring in the action of the Committee of the Whole in striking out the enacting clause of the bill. If he does not call the previous question, the Chair will recognize some other gentleman.

Mr. SPEER. How could there be a previous question upon a motion which the gentleman has withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. The previous question could be ordered upon striking out the enacting clause of the bill. The Chair begs to call the attention of the House to the fact that if this bill shall be recommitted and reported back, in point of time or parliamentary advantage there would be no possible gain to either side, because you would have to begin de novo in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to be heard a few moments in explanation of what I have been doing.

Mr. WOOD. Is discussion in order?

Mr. DAWES. I only want to explain.

Mr. WOOD. I object to debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. DAWES. I do not desire to discuss the bill; I want to explain what I have been doing.

Mr. WOOD. We know what you have been doing.

Mr. BUCKNER. I object to debate.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means, with instructions to report a bill taxing incomes and taxing whisky at 85 cents per gallon, and having nothing else in the bill. On that question I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question, if ordered, will extend through to the final question upon striking out the enacting clause, in case the motion to recommit with instructions should be voted down.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered.

The question was then taken upon the motion to recommit with instructions; and upon a division—ayes 29, noes 128—it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon striking out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. COX. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The House having refused to strike out the enacting clause of the bill, it stands recommitted to the Committee of the Whole House.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. HALE, of Maine, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole upon the bill to further protect the sinking fund and to provide for the exigencies of the Government. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. FIELD. I move to amend by inserting the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. That from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties now imposed in Schedule K, section 2504 of the Revised Statutes, on the articles herein-after enumerated, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say:

On sawed boards, plank, deals, and other lumber of hemlock, whitewood, sycamore, and basswood, $2 per thousand feet board measure; all other varieties of sawed lumber, $4 per thousand feet board measure.

Mr. DAWES. I hope that will not be adopted.

Mr. FIELD. It will yield a million dollars of revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no right to debate his amendment.

Mr. FIELD. Nor has the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I move to amend by inserting the following as a new section:

SEC. —. That upon all manufactured tobacco the manufacturer thereof shall be entitled to a drawback equal to the amount of duties which shall be shown to have been paid upon imported licorice which has entered into the manufacture of said tobacco, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, said duties to be ascertained and certified by the collector of internal revenue of the district in which said tobacco is manufactured, and when so ascertained and certified the same shall be allowed and paid as in other cases of drawback of duties on manufactured articles.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 62, noes 77.

Mr. WHITEHEAD called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 36, noes 68; no quorum voting.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOSKINS. I move to amend by inserting the following:

That any manufacturer of tobacco or snuff who shall have given a bond in conformity with the provisions of the internal-revenue law now in force, or which may hereafter be in force, and who shall have otherwise complied with all the provisions of law relating to the manufacture and sale of tobacco and snuff, shall be allowed the privilege, under such rules and regulations and after filing such bonds as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, of transferring to his manufactory licorice and other materials used in the manufacture of tobacco and snuff directly from any vessel in which said articles and materials have been imported from a foreign country or from any bonded warehouse in which the same may be in original and unbroken packages without payment of duties thereon. Every manufacturer of tobacco or snuff, before he shall be entitled to the provisions of this act, shall file with the collector of customs, at the port of entry, or at the port of delivery where the vessel entered, or in which the bonded warehouse is located in which the articles or materials subject to impost duties may be, a bond, with good and sufficient sureties, in double the amount of the duties chargeable thereon and uncollected, truly and faithfully to convey or transfer the same to his factory, giving the State, district, and number of his factory, &c., and that he will remove no portion of such articles or materials from his said factory, but will use and consume the entire amount in the manufacture of articles aforesaid; and on the 1st of January of each and every year, or at the time of concluding business, upon the affidavit of the manufacturer that all the articles and materials transferred to his factory as aforesaid have been, during the year, entirely used and consumed by him in the manufacture of tobacco or snuff as aforesaid, and upon the verification of such affidavit of the manufacturer by the collector of internal revenue of the district where such manufacturer has his place of business from his own personal knowledge and examinations of such manufacturer's stock returns and inventories, the collector of customs as aforesaid is authorized and directed to cancel such bonds.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order. I make the point that when a member of the House demands a further count it is the duty of the Chair to recognize him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Michigan call for a further count.

Mr. CONGER. I rose in time to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair took the indication from the tellers that no further count was insisted on, and then recognized the gentleman from Connecticut to offer an amendment.

Mr. MYERS. I move the following to come in as an additional section:

Mr. FIELD. I want to explain why I offer that.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. FIELD. I offer this as a substitute for the whole bill.

Mr. SPEER. Cannot the gentleman from Michigan be heard by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee cannot give unanimous consent to any prolongation of debate.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the committee rise and report the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HALE, of Maine, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4680) further to protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. DAWES. I have no disposition to rehearse to the House the reasons which have already been given by other members of the Committee on Ways and Means and by myself why it is necessary to pass some bill that will bring into the Treasury somewhere near the sum of money heretofore found to be necessary to carry on the Government. As I have already said, it is not the desire of any person in the Committee on Ways and Means or elsewhere to bring into the Treasury a larger sum of money than heretofore. The necessities of the Government do not require so large a sum as heretofore, but they do require more than the present revenues of the country give any assurance or promise will be at the command of the Government after Congress shall adjourn. And those on both sides of the House who regard with concern the adjournment of Congress without supplying the just and fair and proper means for carrying on the Government, those who do not desire to throw over the question to an extra session of Congress or to go to the country to face the responsibility and the reproach of having failed to supply the Government of this country with the necessary means for meeting its obligations, those who prefer to keep the faith of the Government as well to its bonded creditors, if I may use the phrase that has been used so frequently in the odious sense, as to other creditors who have demands upon the Government, will I think sympathize with the Committee on Ways and Means in the effort they have been making to present to the House and if possible to carry through a measure that would command a majority in both branches of Congress, and not only become a law but meet the approving judgment of the people, whatever may be their political prejudices; and will say that in this exigency of the Government, brought on by causes over which legislation has no control, the Committee on Ways and Means, not following party lines but with a regard to its obligations to the country without regard to party, has on the whole presented to the country a method of replenishing its Treasury the least objectionable.

As I said when this bill was reported to the House, there was in it that which each member on the Committee on Ways and Means, if called to pass upon it by itself, did not approve; but as a whole the Committee on Ways and Means felt that they were presenting to the country a method of replenishing the Treasury which is the least objectionable and the least injurious to the business of the country. The bill has gone through just such an ordeal in the Committee of the Whole as those who have experience here in the House foresaw awaited it. At no time in the deliberations concerning this bill has it in my mind undergone any peril until after the committee passed the printed text of the bill. If the House would have consented to have taken the bill as the committee left the printed text, amended as it had been, there would have been some expectation, some hope in the minds of those who have made this a study, and have felt the responsibility resting upon them to urge upon the House these measures—some expectation and some chance of the bill becoming a law, although there were in it then features that would not have commanded for themselves the support of a majority of those who reported the bill and would not by itself perhaps have commanded a majority of the House itself.

But I have been too long in my position here not to know, and there is no man in this House but has been long enough in his position here not to know, that all these bills come of concession and concession alone. No tax or tariff bill ever passed Congress which received the sanction of any member of Congress except as a whole. There are features of that law that, taken by themselves, each member of the House would feel called upon to vote against, while as a whole these bills have commanded the support of the House.

The result of the amendments upon this bill, without reflecting on the motive which has actuated any gentleman—and he has a right to have his motives considered to be as upright as those of any other member—nevertheless is such that in its present shape it cannot become a law. I doubt whether there is any member of the House who hears me who believes that in its present shape it can become a law. For one, sir, I am free to say that serious disturbances of business and of peace in this Government would follow an attempt to enforce the provisions of this bill, some of which in theory are not only wise and just, but in theory the most wise and just of all measures of taxation, but yet have been tried in this country and in other countries, and have been found utterly impracticable and impossible to enforce. It is a measure of taxation that abstractly no gentleman can argue against. I allude to the income tax, which I have always believed and to-day believe to be the most just and proper tax that ever was enforced; and yet nothing is more true than that every gentleman who had anything to do with the enforcement of it and almost all gentlemen I have ever heard speak of it are concurrent in the belief that to enforce it fully, to make those best able to pay it pay it and those least able to pay it not to pay more than is their just due has been found in England and in this country an utter impossibility. It has been abandoned there and abandoned here because it is promotive of perjury and demoralization throughout the land. Those who ought to pay pay not, and those who should least pay pay the most.

And now, sir, believing that the necessities of the Government call upon us before we adjourn to pass some revenue measure, I propose to make one more effort in that direction. If I shall fail, as the organ of the Committee on Ways and Means and personally I shall feel that I have discharged my whole duty, and the committee will feel that they have discharged theirs in the premises.

I propose to offer as a substitute for this bill one that shall tax whisky hereafter made 90 cents per gallon; that shall leave the tax on tobacco as it stands in the bill; that shall tax sugar as in the amended bill, and that shall restore the 10 per cent. as in the bill; and I shall also include the last section of the bill as perfected with the
